IS SURGERY ADVANCING AS RAPIDLY AS MEDICINE?

When we go back less than twenty years and remember that diabetes died within a few years, that the pernicious anaemia patients died within one or two years, that there was but little knowledge of allergy—sensitivity to various substances which cause asthma, hay fever, eczema, common colds and skin inflammations—we cannot but realize that medicine has made great progress.

As we look at surgery we may not feel that much progress has been made because it would be rather hard to imagine any one more skillful than the surgeons of the present day, aside from having the help obtained from the laboratory, connected with every hospital. However, when we read a short editorial in Digest of Treatment by Dr. Frank H. Lahey, head of the Lahey Clinic, Boston, on Recent Surgical Development of Interest to the General Practitioner, it must be admitted that surgery is not really lagging behind.

Some of the recent advances in surgery mentioned by Dr. Lahey are of unusual interest.

Previous to July 3, 1931 when a Department of Chest Surgery was established in our clinic there had been only one case of lung cancer (carcinoma of the lung) discovered. Since that time 52 cases have been found, of which eleven patients had the cancer removed by surgery and five are alive and well today.

Splendid results have been obtained in patients suffering with mental symptoms and persistent annoying headaches. After recounting the splendid results of two patients operated on by two and a half inch incisions, Dr. Lahey asks: "How many punch drunk boxers suffer from headaches and mental changes could be relieved of their symptoms by operation?"

The results obtained by surgery in cancer of the lower bowel and particularly of the last six inches are almost beyond belief as we realize that untreated cancer means death. Dr. Lahey states that 47 percent with cancer of the colon (lower bowel) and 42 percent with cancer of the rectum are alive and well with no return of symptoms more than five years after operation.

Dr. Lahey speaks also of other conditions formerly considered hopeless, but which are now successfully overcome, in many cases, by surgery.

It is gratifying to know that surgeons now can make advances which formerly believed to be impossible.

Skewers and long pins may be bought now to fasten the ends of the stuffer in the neck of chicken with that bit of sewing the housewife used to do to close the openings. The pins are placed in a row holding the gap between the stuffer and the neck white and the skewers down the pins hold the sides tight. Skewers are used at the neck opening and thus all sewing is eliminated.

TIMELY NOTES ON TOPICS CONNECTED WITH Silver Fox Farming

It is reported that in April, 1934, the first pair of wild caught silver foxes found in this Province was dug out of a hole at Fox Hill, near Tignish. The property is now owned by Mr. C. F. Morrissey, and believe it or not, this April he dug out a litter of red fox pups from the same identical hole!

The London letter to the New York Fur Trade Review for April contains some very interesting information. According to it the fur trade is distinctly better in the great metropolises than it was in December, but not feeling any too grand. Gloomy predictions were on the go early in January, yet the remains that at the winter sales the world trade spent two millions and a half dollars on silver foxes and over a million on South West African Persian lambs, quite apart from the general fur catalogue. European countries have been unable to absorb the quantities of furs that they used in the past. The French, for example, buy little here, no doubt partly owing to their devalued currency; the German purchases are also very limited, but there is considerable support from Australia and South Africa, with strong purchasing power from South America particularly noticeable for the finer skins.

Silvers The Seasons Success—The fox situation is also very sound as silvers are still in demand world over. At the winter sale just concluded in Oslo, Norway, they sold 90 per cent of the offering and the entire Scandinavian market is now bare of goods. In London we have a record quantity at the turn of the year and have felt no ill effects. At the moment the call is chiefly for lower grades for trimmings and making up into capes and coats.

Blue Fox Expensive—In this connection there are plenty who predict that silvers are finished for really smart wear, although I personally see no sign of it in the collections of the best London dressmakers. Blue fox is to be the thing, they say, and no doubt this accounts for the fantastic prices paid lately in Copenhagen. The skin is being freely described here as a lunatic, but he may be right. There is a demand for blue fox, certainly, but it has not gone much beyond merchanting circles yet. We recall that blue fox was the only article to fetch higher prices at the last sale. It is very limited in supply.

Cross Fox Active—Cross fox surprisingly enough is also active. At the winter sale it declined 10 per cent and only 30 per cent of the brokers total offerings was sold, so the demand has evidently dropped up since then. It is wanted by the makers of coats and capes that will work out as cheap or cheaper than silver fox and be equally effective. Kamchatka foxes are being sold by the ton, and dressmakers who unfortunately want only the blood-red skins. Few of these are to be had of course, so there is no danger of this fashion being overdone.

Silver Fox Prices in Oslo, Norway—There was a large attendance of foreign buyers at the winter sale of the Norwegian Skinnauktioner in Oslo recently. About 14,000 silver fox skins were offered. France was a heavy buyer at this sale. 89 per cent of the skins were sold. Three-quarter silvers averaged $30.75. One-half silvers averaged $26. The top price was $137.50. The top price for a blue fox at the same sale was $90.

Report on Special Silver Fox Sale Held by The New York Auction Company, March 15th, 1938.—The result of this sale was an extraordinary example of the popularity of silver foxes with the consuming public, for in spite of strikes, unsettled state of business and other troubles the entire sale of color phases exceeded the price levels established earlier in the season. The offering comprised an original collection of 3,700 skins, which were 100 per cent sold, and approximately 12,000 pelts from independent shippers of which an almost equal percentage changed hands. In view of the rapid consumption of the pelts which have already been offered we have decided to hold our next sale, May 24, New York Auction Company, Inc.

7,712 full silvers averaged $47.43. 4,209 three-quarter silvers averaged $37.24. 1,993 half silvers averaged $30.68. 502 one-quarter silvers averaged $26.12. The average for all skins was $38.30 and the average excluding undescribed skins $40.97.

The report of the London sales held prior to the latter part of March and the first week of April has not come to hand, with the exception of the Hudson's Bay Company's offering of 39,098 skins at prices slightly easier than January levels. They were mostly of Canadian origin. A steady demand was experienced from the London trade and the French buyers were cautious because of the depression of the franc. South American and Italian interests were represented. Prices above $35.00 and below $20.00 were firm and values between these figures declined from five to ten per cent. 5,965 full silvers averaged $29.00. 7,251 three-quarter silvers averaged $21.25. 2,192 one-quarter silvers averaged $17.50. 940 dark and slightly silvers averaged $14.75. 2,418 interiors averaged $10.88.

The Canadian National Silver Fox Breeders Association fur marketing department in advice to consignors issued April 9th, says: "The London March auction of silver fox pelts opened on the 28th, with an offering of approximately 124,000 pelts. Hudson's Bay Co., A. M. L. and Henry Kiver & Co. Ltd., and the London Fur Sales Ltd., held the auction the week previous.

Cable reports received to date indicate that less than 50 per cent of the Canadian offering was sold with a fall in prices lower than January levels, greater demand being for merchandise up to $25.00 and over $60.00 in value, while pelts under $25.00 were in short supply. Barring a continuation of the recent political and economic upheavals throughout Europe, there should be a considerable sale of pelts by private treaty before the next auction is held, which is scheduled to open May 23rd."

The New York Fur Trade Review says: "As we write we see silver fox scarfs shipped by New York fashionable shippers for as little as $47.00 per skin, and matched pairs for as little as $75.00 per pair. Of course these are low grade skins, it is true, but nevertheless they are saleable and are meeting with good demand. The better grades of silver fox sell all the way up to $300 a pair and are cheap at that when their beauty is taken into consideration and are meeting with good demand. The prices which ruled on these fine silver foxes only a few years ago.

The lower prices have widened the market for silver fox scarfs enormously. They have brought new business and a greater volume of business to the retailers. They will continue to sell during the remainder of this year. There seems to be no end to the consumer demand for this fur. Greater beauty, greater quality, but it has not gone much beyond merchanting circles yet. We recall that blue fox was the only article to fetch higher prices at the last sale. It is very limited in supply.

Our comment—What will the opponents of lower duty on silver fox pelts entering into the United States say to the editorial leading matter above regarding their fur trade publication?

The Tidens Tegn, the leading daily paper of Oslo, Norway, opening its editorial columns by endorsing their recent silver fox sales. Criticism including the following: "Talk has been going on for some time about the fur trade, and persons of Jewish extraction, connive in order to keep prices down, while they themselves are selling furs and users abroad keep prices up."

The above statement was greatly resented by the numerous foreign buyers visiting Oslo, and in the conclusion of the sale Max Blumenthal, a well known newspaper editor regarding that they were utterly devoid of any basis of fact. Subsequent newspaper articles regretted the indiscreet writings of the paper and the editor's opinion that if these foreign buyers transferred their patronage from the Oslo fur market to other foreign markets, the manager of the auction and the fur commissioner agreed in the statement that buyers are not determining the market prices, but the world situation that determines the demand and it must not be forgotten that prices of silver foxes have fallen to a considerably smaller extent this year than the prices on many other furs.

The Norwegian fur trade and the Norwegian silver fox breeders are very unhappy about the attack in the affair, and claim that the attack on the Jewish merchants was inspired by foreign sources.

During the month of January, 1938, the United States merchants imported 3,315 silver fox pelts valued at $109,503. During the same month of last year they imported 9,816 silver fox pelts valued at $424,292.
