Thinking people have confidence in ENO

Our greatest asset is the public's confidence in ENO's "Fruit Salt". To try other laxatives is to discover anew how much better ENO is — pleasanter, gentler, safer, surer.

ENO acts in an entirely natural way to keep you clean within. It contains nothing to harm you—no purgative mineral salts, no sugar, no flavoring matter. Doctors know how fine ENO is for the many ailments that arise from intestinal sluggishness, they use it and prescribe it.

Is it wise to experiment with your health when you can so safely guard it by a 'dash' of ENO first thing every morning?

The words "Fruit Salt" and ENO, and the label shown on the package, are registered trade marks. 564

A Fine Tribute

"The full harvest of what our fathers sowed has been slow to ripen. Still it is true and only the voice of unthinking gratitude can deny that in these fifty years we have garnered much. The obstacles encountered have been greater than we believed, but they have been as nothing when compared with the obstacles and dangers which by our union we surmounted. And if in these years we feel again the pains of sectional dissension, and there is searching of hearts about our future, let us put on the armor of men of old who fought these same dragons in far more perilous array; let us look back across the span of two generations and watch the bold brave figures of the captains of that time; let us learn from their patience and emulate their courage and highly resolve to enrich by our devotion the noble edifice they have handed down. And when distrust moves among us to estrange race from race, or class from class or to whisper in our ear that we are not our brother's keeper, let us listen over the hills to the reverberating eloquence, the lofty patriotism, the warm-hearted toleration, the wholesome wisdom of Thomas D'Arcy McGee."

NEW ROAD INSPECTOR.—Mr. William Cain of Summerville is receiving the congratulations of his many friends on his appointment to the important office of inspector for Kings County. Mr. Cain is well qualified for the position and will fill it with befitting dignity. He has been road master for Summerville for several years and constructed some of its principal bridges and claimed the credit of making a good clay road for the minimum cost of twenty dollars per mile. He always practiced rigid economy and viewed with horror the lavish and extravagant expenditure of public money upon the roads, and his appointment to this office is assurance to the Province that this expenditure will be curtailed. Being always an ardent advocate and efficient user of the homely log-drag this useful road implement will now throughout his inspectorate be more used than ever. Mr Cain has been in public life sime time and filled various offices of trust. He is secretary of the school and has many times served on the board of trustees always taking an active part in the advancing of education, and was instrumental in procuring for the school a nice toned bell which now adorns the building. Largely through his executive ability and business foresight the Maple Leaf Institute has become a large and important factor to the farming community. Acting as the general salesman and purchasing agent, he always discharged his duties to the satisfaction of all and regret is expressed at the thought of losing him, as the appointment may necessitate the removal of his residence to some central town, and the duties so oneraus as to require his undivided attention. But their loss will be his gain. Mr. Cain has also been chief Conservative whip and organizer for the local district and enjoys the privilege of an intimate acquaintance with both representatives, and will be a valuable acquisition to the Minister and the Department of Public Works.

P. W. College Debating Society

The Prince of Wales College Debating Society held a debate on April 21st, on the subject—"Resolved that individuals accomplish more than unions." The "pro" speakers, Miss Helen Jamieson, Mr. John Connolly, Miss Cora Shea, and Mr. Raymond Hughes argued that articles made by individuals were more artistic, and better in design than those made in factories. They cited the case of Oliver Cromwell, while he was living he was able to accomplish much with his army, but after his death the Commonwealth soon fell into decay. They made numerous illustrations from history to show that unions without leaders are powerless. They claimed that the great masterpieces of music, art and literature were the result of individual attainments. The only thing unions had done was to bring on disastrous strikes. In the Great War, the leaders of the different armies found they were hindering rather than aiding each other, they appointed Foch as generallissimo, and he soon led them to victory.

The "con" speakers, Miss Anna MacDougall, and Miss Constance Hunter argued that it was impossible to differentiate between the work accomplished by individuals, and that accomplished by unions. The Ford car was not perfected by Henry Ford alone, but was actually the work of many persons. If Labor leaders are able to accomplish anything, it is because they have great organizations behind them. The most perfect thing in the universe is the human body, and it is made up of numerous parts acting in harmony. The fact that the Carnegie people were offering a large sum of money to the universities of the Maritime Provinces if they would unite shows that the Carnegie people believe that unions accomplish more than individuals. The work of Christ could not have been carried on if his disciples had not united to spread his teachings over the earth. The vote resulted in a victory by a narrow margin for the "con" side. The critic, Miss Linda Currie complimented the speakers on their well-prepared speeches. The honorary president expressed himself as being well pleasd with the debate. Very seldom had he enjoyed a debate better.

The Dennistoun Case

The Most Famous Matrimonial Case Since Charles II's Time.

Did you say:—Even if I wanted to stop the case now it is absolutely out of my hands as Sir George Lewis has made me sign a paper to this effect as he said I let him down once before?—I have never signed a paper to that effect.

Did you tell Lady Cunliffe Owen your great friend, that?—I told her only, if I said it at all, that if I started this case I would go through with it, but I never signed any writing.

Counsel handed up to the witness a letter and asked her whether it was in Lady Cunliffe Owen's handwriting.

Mrs. Dennistoun said that she could not say as she had had only one letter from Lady Cunliffe Owen in China. She would not guarantee that the letter was in Lady Cunliffe Owen's handwriting.

After reading the letter Mrs. Dennistoun saids:—Well, I am not sure that this is Lady Cunliffe Owen's handwriting. I do not mind if she wrote it, but I will not swear that it is her writing. It is not the way she expresses herself, nor does she make mistakes by repeating her words.

Sir Edward Marshall Hall.— Do you suggest that I am producing a forged document?—Not in the least but you might be imagining that it is Lady Cunliffe Owen's letter.

It is either her writing or a fraudulent representation?—I don't mind it being hers, but you are apparently trying to quote things as being said by me which I never said.

She has signed something which is not accurate?—I don't think I ever said it.

You told us that Lady Cunliffe Owen had tried to dissuade you from going on with this action?—She hated the idea of being talked about. I have never given Sir George Lewis any letter—or anything on the subject, but I told him that if I started it I would go through with it.

Why did you tell Sir George Lewis that you would go through with this action?—Because I suppose a woman does not want to start and take a lot of trouble and then say, "I won't fight it."

You did let him down before, because you withdrew the action for the motor cars?—Yes.

Have you said that Lady Carnavon would pay £100,000 sooner than that this case should come into court?—I have never said any such thing; it is a lie.

What was the amount that you hoped to recover by this action?—I have had no hope of anything; it was left to the jury to decide what it was right for me to have.

The Plaintiff Re-examined.

Sir Ellis Hume-Williams, re-examining, asked the plaintiff when she first met Mr. W. and she replied that he was a complete stranger to her until she met him at a party.

Counsel.—How did it come about that you arranged to go on this business trip together? — We discussed the business of buying and selling pictures, and he told me that he was an artist and a judge of pictures. I said that I thought of going to Spain, where there was a fine collection of early primitives, but that I did not like to buy them on my own judgment.

Had there been anything in the nature of a flirtation? —Nothing of any kind whatsoever.

The plaintiff added that she acted for several firms in the business of buying antiques, one of her principals being Mr. Thornton Smith.

Who paid the expenses of the visit to Spain?—We each paid our own.

The plaintiff said that on the last trip she bought about £700 worth of materials and pictures and Mr. W. aided her by his advice. He also bought on his own account. She had never been to Spain except to buy.

Have you ever committed adultery with Mr. W.?—I have not.

Sir Ellis Hume-Williams.—It has been suggested to you that the object of this action was to get money out of Lady Carnavon; that is what it really comes to. Have you ever authorized anybody to approach the other side and tried to get a settlement of this case?—No.

Was the one stipulation which Sir George Lewies made, that if he undertook this case it should be carried through? —I promised Sir George Lewis that if I started this case I would go through with it.

And supposing that your claim is a just one—that is, supposing you have been speaking the truth—do you see any reason why you should not pursue your claim because your husband has married a rich woman?—I see no reason at all; otherwise I would not have started the case.

You had nothing to do with your husband having married Lady Carnavon, except that you introduced them?—Nothing at all.

We shall doubtless hear later on what are the circumstances in
