St. Catharines, Ont.—"During my first expectant period I was in very poor health, was very nervous, suffered from morning sickness, had backache and abdominal pains. I was as miserable as could be. That a friend I learned of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, and after I began taking it I got along fine; it relieved me of the morning sickness, pains and distress thru my back and sides and I grew well and strong. Was able to do my own work the remainder of the time. I experienced very little suffering and had a fine healthy baby, who has never had a day's sickness except slight colds. I was very glad to know of a medicine so valuable as the 'Prescription' proved to be."—Mrs. Reginald Stone, 68 Haynes Ave. All dealers.

YOUNG WOMEN SUFFER MOST

These Two Found Relief by Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Ayer's Cliff, Quebec.—"I have been teaching for three years, and at the end of the year I always feel tired and have no appetite. I was a awful sick each month, too, having pains in my back until sometimes I was obliged to stop working. A friend recommended Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to me and I heard many women telling how good it was so I thought it would help me. And it did. Now I take six bottles every year and recommend it to my class."—DONALDA DENTREUX, Ayer's Cliff, Quebec.

The Unwilling Adventurer

BY MILDRED BARBOUR

CONCERNING THE ACTION AND CHARACTERS:

Shortly after the death of his wife known to the operatic world as Elaine Vanessa Edgar MacKay disappears, abandoning their baby in a railway station while enroute to visit his wife's aunt, Miss Elsie Young.

CHAPTER 2 THE GOLDEN VOICE

Fifteen years had passed since Miss Elsie Young of Drayburg, had brought from the Roundhills Home at Weyburn the tiny waif who was her grand-niece.

Her arrival with the child, and without explanations—for Miss Elsie was not the type of woman who gives an account of her actions to her fellowmen and women—had caused a nice day sensation in the peaceful, little town with its quiet, elm-bordered sidewalks; and its neat, white cottages set back from orderly lawns. Lamps in sitting rooms all over the village burned late while neighbor popped in up on neighbor to discuss the event which had brought into their midst a new inhabitant, under such mysterious circumstances.

Miss Elsie's ward, whom she named Doris, lived and flourished and grew lovelier day by day. When the child was still in her teens, the hopes of her great-aunt seemed in a fair way to being justified. The girl had inherited her mother's talent. She had a voice like a lark, clear as crystal, melodious as a purring brook.

So he remained in the picturesque, little, mid-western town and pottered around his garden, wearing shabby, old, velvetene jackets, and smoking a vile pipe. He took Miss Elsie's niece grudgingly—until he heard her sing!

Then the old fire flashed in his dim eyes. He trembled with emotion as he said, "You'll be great some day. Got a voice! You have a wonderful voice."

She was scarcely more than a child, then, with skirts just covering her knees and silvery-gilt braids swinging down her back. "Some day," he went on, puffing on his terrible pipe—the lesson was just finished and she was slipping her music into its neat leather case, "some day, people will come to hear you sing in great opera houses of Paris and Milan. Ach, do I not know? Haf I not seen? In your own New York vunder, have I not mit my own eyes seen ten thousand people standing in der rain waiting to hear your own mutter sing 'Mignonne'?"

Elaine Vanessa's daughter shook back her shining braids, "If I don't want to be an opera singer," she said simply. "What a 'Marguerite' you will ve!" muttered the old man. "Why don't you want to sing, my little one?" "I want to get married when I grow up and have a house and thirteen children," the girl said solemnly.

The old German took the pipe from his mouth and roared with laughter. Doris flushed, but held her ground. "I do!" she insisted. He patted her blonde head. "Vell spoken, my child—like a real woman. But marriage is not for you. You haf the divine spark. It will burn you—maybe destroy you—but it will rule you. You will make any sacrifice."

On her nineteenth birthday, Miss Elsie told Doris her plans for the future. "Next winter," she said, "I have arranged for you to go to New York to study. You will stay with your cousins, Camilla and Henry Fielding. They were with me the day it went to Weyburn to get you."

"Aunt Elsie," Doris lifted her green eyes to the older woman's face, "tell me, did you never hear anything further about—my father?" "Never!" the thin lips set tightly. "I suppose," mused Doris, "that he got killed somehow."

"If he did," said the aunt locally, "he succeeded in destroying his body. Nothing was ever found."

"Perhaps," said Doris, only half aloud, "I reminded him of my mother and he couldn't bear to look at me."

"You're like Elaine." Miss Elsie studied the curve of the half-veiled cheek. "A good deal like her. You also resemble your cousin Camilla Fielding—the one I've just mentioned."

"My looks can't be very individual if I share them with so many people." Her aunt was silent. She didn't believe in encouraging vanity; moreover, she had a suspicion that the little mix knew just how pretty she was.

For more than two years, Miss Elsie's veranda had been cluttered during summer evenings with admiring, husky-voiced youths. She had watched them with sharp eyes. She had no mind to permit Doris' career to be nipped in the bud by a puppy love affair.

But, for all her watchfulness, Doris precipitated a sensation in August of her nineteenth year—the first of a long series of sensations in a career considerably sprinkled with excitement. (To Be Continued)

And Dominion Linoleum Rugs are supremely practical. They are firm, smooth and seamless and wonderfully easy to clean and keep clean. Dirt or dust cannot cling to them nor can they tear or curl at the edges. Just lay them down and they hug the floor, without fastening of any kind. Thus they are easily moved from room to room as the fancy strikes you. Dominion Linoleum Rugs are very moderately priced and hold their beauty through years of service. MALPEQUE

The deep sympathy of the community is extended to Mr. and Mrs. Robert Champion and family in the sudden passing of little Miss Blanche, the eleven-year-old daughter, in their home. Blanche was in attendance at school until a week ago when she was stricken with erysipelas which later developed into meningitis, and she passed away in the early morning of Friday, Nov. 5th. Blanche was a bright, willing scholar in school, and a helpful member in the home. It seems regrettable that a young life with all its untold possibilities should be so suddenly taken and a home so greatly saddened on account of the removal of a loved member. The funeral service was held at the home on Sunday afternoon at two o'clock, and was very largely attended. The first part of the service was conducted by Rev. D. M. Grant, of Princeton church, who spoke most consolingly from the words "Let not your heart be troubled," while the latter part was taken by Rev. Mr. Williamson, of the Presbyterian congregation of this place, who exhorted his hearers to live the life of preparation for the inevitable. Interment took place in Malpeque cemetery, and the pall-bearers were
