PRESIDENT

died. They had spent Saturday night at her bedside.

Mrs. Roosevelt's greatest joy was her son, whom she referred to occasionally when speaking in public as "my son, the President." Although noted for her extreme energy and activity, she preferred to avoid the limelight, but if she could lend herself on any occasion in a manner to "help Franklin," she usually did.

She had watched her son take command of a country in the depths of depression and lead a fight for domestic recovery perhaps unparalleled in the nation's history. Then she saw him become a spokesman of democracy opposed to the advance of totalitarianism in a world at war.

Once in 1939, when she sailed for Paris, she was asked if she were not afraid of war. She replied:—

"I don't know. I suppose so, but if it comes I'll live through it. And if not—" she shrugged and smiled.

Mrs. Roosevelt had been a widow since Dec. 8, 1900

A Handsome Woman

Although her hair was white and her face showed some signs of her age, she was a handsome woman, retaining much of the singular beauty which had caused friends in her young womanhood to label her and her four sisters "the five beautiful Delano sisters."

It was disclosed that the funeral would be held at the family home which commands a beautiful view of the Hudson, and that only relatives and neighbors and friends of the approximate age of Mrs. Roosevelt would be permitted to attend.

Burial will be in the family plot behind historic St. James Church an ivy covered gray stone building more than two miles up the Albany Post Road from the Roosevelt estate.

Mrs. Roosevelt not only lived to see her only son become President but also lived to see him shatter all precedent by being elected to a third term.

She was born Sept. 21, 1854, the daughter of a long line of merchants in the Far East trade. Her father was Warren Delano, who engaged in banking and commerce. Her marriage to James Roosevelt Oct. 7, 1880, joined her to a line equally aristocratic.

Mrs. Roosevelt's death came only two weeks from what would have been her 87th birthday anniversary, which by family tradition was observed at the Hyde Park estate.

Mrs. Roosevelt's only living sister, Mrs. Price Collier of Tuxedo Park, N.Y., visited her Saturday. Her brother, Frederic A. Delano, who is chairman of the National Resources Planning Board in Washington, came to Hyde Park this morning.

Two years ago—at the age of 84—Mrs. Roosevelt was hostess to King George and Queen Elizabeth and thus became the first woman in history to entertain British rulers in a private home (Hyde Park) in the United States.

NAZIS ADMIT

Stressed also in the front reports were difficulties imposed by the weather. One army reporter wrote that the roads are "bottomless mud."

Hundreds of German combat planes and dive-bombers attacked the defenders of Leningrad in the area south of Lake Ladoga yesterday, D. N. B., Nazi propaganda and news agency claimed tonight, and only one German plane was claimed lost in the assault.

In the extreme southern sector of the big Russian-German front, the Nazi raiders directed blows against troop concentrations and columns in the area between the Dnieper river and the sea of Azov, D. N. B. reported.

In the middle sector German planes again bombarded railway lines leading to the front and D. N. B. claimed they destroyed 26 trains including one loaded with munitions.

The air-sea action, which was part of the Leningrad operations, the Germans claimed aerial destruction of a 2,000-ton transport off Oesel Island, damaging of a speedboat and three patrol craft.

The air force was claimed to have carried out new attacks on the city and harbor of Odessa, on the Black Sea, at the southern end of the main German-Russian battle line. Odessa has been ringed by German and Rumanian besiegers for days.

As a surprise to the Germans about 40 miles east of Odessa there has just been a Russian artillery counter-assault on Ochakov. Russian batteries opened fire from a small Black Sea island but the Germans claimed they were silenced by German gunners.

German military leaders were especially reluctant to mention places involved in fighting in the middle sector of the front where the Russians have been counter-attacking fiercely.

the case with an Empire war cabinet where the Canadian representative would be called upon to express Canada's view without an opportunity of consulting other members of the Canadian Government or experts.

"Mr. Churchill is anxious that the connection should be maintained between the British Empire and Vichy through the Vichy minister, Rene Ristelhueber in Ottawa and charge d'affaires P. Dupuis, who is Canada's representative to Vichy." Although stationed in London Mr. Dupuis from time to time visits Vichy.

"These constitute the only link that remains between the Empire and the Vichy Government," Mr. King said, and it was felt it should be maintained.

This was in amplification of his announcement in London last week that the Vichy Minister would remain in Ottawa. "One never knows the moment developments might make the link between Canada and Vichy highly desirable," he said today.

Mr. King disclosed that he will broadcast to the Canadian people on his visit "within a few days".

The date for the broadcast, he added, is not definitely set yet.

In a written statement issued shortly after his arrival, Mr. King said that the "most vivid" impression of his trip was "a heightened sense of the immediate dangers of the present conflict to all parts of the world.

"Developments from now on may follow with surprising rapidity. Time as well as space is being eliminated.

"I have returned, too, with a deepened impression of the immensity of the peril and with an even stronger conviction that the defeat of Nazi barbarism and Prussian militarism which underlies it will come only from the unremitting and united efforts of all free men. The dangers with which mankind is confronted today are world encircling."

He was "greatly impressed," Mr. King's statement added, by "what I saw and what, on all sides, I heard of our Canadian forces."

Interpreting The War

Coming at this time, such a pronouncement would be a direct warning to both Japan and Germany that neither the submarine-destroyer incident off Iceland nor Japanese protests against movement of munitions across the Pacific to Russia would alter American plans for aiding nations fighting the Axis.

Nazi admission that it was a German submarine which the destroyer Greer battled on its way to Iceland last Thursday adds to the gravity of this incident.

The Nazis, for instance, could have denied official knowledge of the encounter, could have claimed that it was a British trick designed to get the United States into the war (a claim similar to that made in the case of the torpedoing of the liner Athenia in September, 1939) or could have argued that the American destroyer was mistaken for a British warship of the same type.

The line which they actually have taken, however, is that the German U-boat was attacked by a destroyer of unknown nationality and finally discharged torpedoes at it in self-protection. Not until Washington announced that the Greer had been involved in such an encounter, the Germans implied, was it known that the destroyer had been an American ship.

Obviously, Germany's future actions will be based on this account and it is equally clear that the United States' next steps will be predicated on the navy department's statement that the Greer was attacked by the submarine.

Under the circumstances a recurrence of such incidents seems highly probable.

In the American view there is no reason to believe that the next time a ship of the Atlantic patrol discovers a submarine that submarine will not open fire. On the other hand, a German U-boat commander would almost certainly be just as suspicious of what an American warship might try to do to his vessel once it was discovered.

Amid such suspicions on both sides, the least questionable action by either party might be enough to start a fight.

Since the ultimate success of American aid to Britain lies in keeping the sea lanes open and since Iceland now is an American outpost to be supplied and reinforced, the choice as to whether more incidents are to be avoided appears to be one for Germnay to make.

To a considerable extent this choice may be made on the basis of whether the Nazi leadership feels that Germany would have more to gain than to lose by turning the United States into a belligerent and trying, provided Japan would go along, to confront it with the prospect of war on two fronts.

In the Pacific Japan could force the issue of shipments to Russia at virtually any time she chose—provided, of course, that she was willing to risk battle simultaneously with the United States, Britain, China and Russia.

Another aspect of the situation to which the Germans, with their long record of political manipulation, may have given considerable thought is the question of how the democratic United States would react if directly confronted with the necessity of fighting in order to carry out its announced policies.

On the basis of some of their experiences in Europe they might hope to force the United States into disruptive internal political controversy. But it must also be remembered that they have made some notable miscalculations, among them the apparent belief that Britain would not fight when Poland was invaded and the expectation that Russia would crumble when the Nazis turned their lightning war to the east.

GERMANS GREEDY

Many a woman prefers patronizing the cobbler to have investigators in her home because tales are told about inspectors who carry away foodstuffs they regard as surplus or anything else that looks a little extra. In one instance a man's suit was confiscated because it was thought he had one more than necessary.

Hot cakes are slow selling compared to the way German officers and men are gobbling up the silk stocking supply that remains. They are greedy buyers, using worthless marks printed for the army of occupation.

An officer being shown an expensive quality in a specialty shop ordered the entire stock on hand. He said German women had done without for a long time and now they were going to be as smartly dressed as French women. The saleswoman remarked that silk stockings no longer are chic as French women are now wearing wool.

Brilliant Colors

The Germans have cracked down particularly on wools. Woollen things of all kinds, and particularly clothing, are tremendously important to harassed people looking backward and forward to winters in heatless homes. Knitting wools are under the ban of the bon and daily diminishing. The least-wanted colors are all that are left and brilliant results can be noted in red stockings, green bloomers and orange gloves.

All supply stocks are diminishing. The big department stores gradually are closing off sections, sometimes whole floors. Often the stocks of two floors can be and are concentrated in one. The Germans go through buying up right and left without stint.

It is easy to understand why retail shops are not able to restock, if one observes certain things in Paris. One is the frequency of German truck convoys, tarpaulin-covered and battened down to the last inch to keep passersby from glimpsing the interiors. One day near the Gare St. Lazare a wholesale mattress house was emptied out. As rapidly as one German truck was filled with new mattresses, the old went on and the next one got in line. They did not take long to clean out the house.

On the Rue Paul Cezanne are new office buildings having large unrented store spaces on the ground floors. These are full of German-gathered merchandise.

Moscow Reports

front as the war entered its 12th week.

Western Red army forces pursued counter-attacks in the direction of Gomel, southwest of Moscow, and were reported to have recaptured a series of large settlements.

On the approaches to Kiev, the Ukraine capital hundreds of big guns, famed for their accurate fire, were reported raining shells from all sides upon concentrations of German troops and tanks.

At the southern end of the line, where Odessa, like Leningrad, is a centre of embattled resistance, sailors of the Red fleet also were playing a leading role. Naval guns, in co-operation with the army, were shelling German concentrations, artillery batteries and airdromes.

In the Gomel sector a rifle division was reported by Red Star to have destroyed 21 German tanks in one stubborn battle and to have captured many field guns.

In another sector of the western zone, the dispatch said, a large German force tried several times to cross the Khamara River, and did succeed in laying pontoons.

But the Red air fleet attacked, wrecked the bridges and several hundred Germans were reported drowned. The rest were said to have been routed.

Thirty-five German bombers were reported destroyed when Russian raiders swooped upon two airdromes.

In one action in the Kiev sector, Russian dispatches reported a particularly stubborn attempt of the Germans to take "Hill 23" commanding River N.

After repeated assaults up the slopes in which they suffered huge casualties it was said, the Germans finally stormed to the crest, only to be thrown out when Russian reserves launched a counter-attack.

Scattering of a 10-mile-long column of German tanks and trucks in the southwest by a flight of Soviet planes was reported in the Soviet communique. It said 600 Germans were killed and 60 trucks and many tanks destroyed.

A reveiew of aerial operations in the last 11 weeks published in Red Star said the Germans have lost 7,200 planes so far, more than 2,000 of them wrecked on the ground. German Messerschmitt 109s were said to be losing heavily in air battles with Soviet fighters.

DRIVEES NAZIS BACK

Russian counter-assaults led by strong bomber and tank fleets were reported driving deeper into German lines. They had pushed back enemy siege lines three miles on the Leningrad front and had gained 32 miles on another front (presumably the vital central sector). With Marshal Klementi Voroshiloff (ABOVE) personally commanding advance units, a surprise Russian counter-attack before embattled Leningrad was reported by Red Star, army publication, to have driven Germans back through a village and across a river (possibly the Neva).

Prominent S'side business Man passes

The death occurred at his home in Summerside on Sunday morning shortly before 11 o'clock of Mr. William Warren Baker. Mr. "Wallie" Baker as he was affectionately called by his friends had not been in very good health for the past year and in February last underwent two serious operations. During the spring he appeared to be making a good recovery but later received several setbacks, it was however only within the last few days that he was confined to his bed and it was realized that the end was near.

Mr. Baker was a native of Summerside and was 74 years of age. He was the son of the late William P. Baker and Eliza Anne Clark Baker.

He had been associated with the business life of Summerside since a young man. He started out in life with the firm of Wright Bros. who at that time had a prominent general and dry goods store where Brace McKay and Co., now do business. On their retirement Mr. Baker joined the firm of Rogers, Green and Montgomery who had a general store on the site where the Bank of Nova Scotia now stands. He was afterwards connected with the firm of MacGougan and Wright who carried on business on the premises now occupied by Sinclair and Stewart. Leaving that firm Mr. Baker became associated with the firm of R. T. Holman Ltd., and for the past 30 years has been manager of the dress goods department.

In his dealings with the public Mr. Baker was always courteous and obliging and there are many people in town and country who will miss his familiar face and cheery greeting. He was devoted to his family and home and loved to work in his garden of which he was justly proud. He was a good conscientious citizen and was most highly esteemed by all classes of citizens and in his passing Summerside has lost a well beloved citizen and friend.

He leaves to cherish his memory his widow, formerly Ethel May Cannon; one daughter, Mrs. Ewen Nicholson; and three grandchildren, William, Donald and Elizabeth; also four sisters, Mrs. Willard Green, Bedeque; Mrs. P. B. Clark, Summerside; Miss Lily Baker, Bedeque; Mrs. Ralph Gilbert, Cleveland, Ohio; and one brother, Charles C. Baker, Gilbert Plains, Manitoba to all of whom sympathy is extended.

The funeral will take place on Tuesday afternoon at 2 p. m. from his late residence on Pleasant Street to the People's Cemetery.—S and members of the Summerside church, also a resolution reaffirming the Young Peoples opposition to the liquor traffic.

The rally opened on Friday evening and after the usual business a very fine address was given by Rev. A. Gibson, Field Secretary for Christian Education.

On Saturday the rally opened with a worship period and reports followed by discussion groups led by Miss Layton and Rev. I. J. Levy. Miss Layton also gave an address on Young Peoples work in the church. In the afternoon there was more discussions and a social period followed by prayer. Saturday evening Rev. A. Gibson conducted a vesper service which was largely attended. Miss Layton addressed the congregation on Sunday morning speaking on the importance of having Young Peoples Organizations in all the churches and encouraging all young people to attend.

Mr. Ivan Robinson conducted the worship period in the afternoon which was followed by a short consecration service by Rev. A. Gibson who in his address exhorted the young people to consecrate their lives to the work of the kingdom of God.

Rev. Mr. Gibson was also the speaker at the Sunday evening service and gave an eloquent address from the text Matthew 9. 37. He stressed the importance of Christians to realize the need of doing the work of our Lord. The need of Christian living as an example to others. He deplored the lack of Christian doctrine in the public schools where there appears to be no place for the Bible in the curriculum of the schools.

"How can we expect children to grow up to be Christians if they have no Christian training," he asked. There are many children who do not receive any Christian training and it is the duty of all people to see that the children in the constitution of the church receive religious doctrine and also these children for whom no provision is made. It is the responsibility of the older people to see that the young people are taught Christian living Christian service and leadership. He hoped that all would do their part in the Sunday School rally which is to be held in the near future.—S

'Beauty by itself isn't enough. I don't suppose it ever was. But today with need for intelligence and sympathetic understanding greater than ever before, it certainly isn't."

That is a man speaking—a man who recently married a woman who has just about everything—beauty and brains and the sympathetic understanding he speaks about.

Unlike our grandfathers, who went around saying or letting their wives persuade them to say, that beauty is only skin deep, this modern points out that true beauty is important. By beauty, he means the kind that comes from sound health habits, an active mind, good manners and not simply from make makeup or a surface prettiness that is likely to fade all too quickly with the years.

Beauty to him means a clear-eyed fresh-skinned, immaculately clean and neatly-groomed look. And he is right in attaching so much importance to it. But equally right in saying that today even this enviable kind of beauty isn't enough.

It takes good looks or something pretty akin to good looks to make a man ask for the first date. But it takes something more to make him keep on asking for them.

It takes more than mere beauty to make a hostess want you in her inner circle of close friends. Good looks alone may get you invited to few unattached men on her list, but they won't prompt her to ask you to make her house your week-end headquarters.

The beautiful but dumb little thing has not much place in today's picture. It's a time to think, to know what's going on around you and to be a pleasant, interesting person as well as a good-looking one.
