Mr. Young's son, Rev. John P. Young, who was ordained to the Holy Priesthood in Louvain, Belgium, a month previous, celebrated his first High Mass in his native parish church of St. Joseph's, Portland, on Aug. 13th. Miss McGuirk and a large number of former Island friends had the great pleasure of assisting at the Mass. Mrs. McGuirk greatly enjoyed her first visit to the United States and met a large number of former Islanders located in that city, all of whom are living comfortably in spite of the depression and hard times, so much complained of there as elsewhere.

Birds Travel Far Across Many Seas

(Canadian Press)

MONTREAL, Oct. 18—One of the mysteries of biology today is how oceanic birds find their way across the seas, according to V. C. Wynne-Edwards, assistant professor of Ornithology at McGill University, who recently completed eight trips across the Atlantic during the summer months in a special study of sea-birds and their habits.

The McGill ornithologist said the Arctic tern, a bird allied to the gull but smaller and with more graceful flight, breeds in the Canadian Arctic circle and spends the winter as far away as Patagonian and Antarctic shores, using the ocean as a highway in its migrations between the breeding-grounds and the winter quarters in the far south. Although terns have webbed feet they dislike swimming and never alight on the water during migration.

Mr. Edwards pointed out that because they are so difficult to get at comparatively little is known of their habits, and unless one is prepared to make a long journey on a specially chartered ship to the most remote southern islands, one would never see them at all.

AIRWOMEN TO TRY FOR NEW ENDURANCE RECORD

NEW YORK, Oct. 18—Mrs. Floyd Bennett christened an airplane at Floyd Bennett Field yesterday, and Tuesday two women will take it aloft in an attempt to set a new endurance record.

Viola Gentry and Mary Sansom, of Hartford, Conn., will fly the ship. It was named the "Outdoor Girl" by Mrs. Bennett, who cracked a bottle of champagne on its nose while a crowd cheered.

The flyers hope to keep the plane up three weeks. They will refuel the "Outdoor Girl" in the air. The plane carrier a full size bed and other conveniences.

Mrs Gentry and Miss Sansom are well known flyers. Miss Sansom is holder of the women's loop-the-loop record.

Lyrebirds Need Much Protection

(Canadian Press)

CAPE TOWN, South Africa, Oct. 18—Canadian bird-lovers will be interested in the fact that South Africans too have their problems of bird protection and conservation. In this country, however, they are not concerned with the future of the robin or the meadowlark so much as that of the lyrebird, as emphasized in an article in the Cape Argus. The writer in the Argus says:

"The interest of the lyrebirds, and the interests of people who will wish to see and hear these wonderful birds in years to come, demand that discreet action be taken. So famous have the Sherbrooke Forest Lyrebirds become of late that holiday-makers in ever-increasing numbers are seeking them out badly—they tramp through the forest and disturb the male birds, and when they chance upon a nest they pay it so much attention that the egg invariably is deserted. Both last year and this year lyrebirds in the Dandenong Ranges have abandoned nests owing to the unrestrained admiration of too many people. At present however, there is little possibility of scaring the male birds, which mostly have gone into 'recess.' The brilliant fantasies of mimicry are now much less frequent, and the famous displays and dances are 'out of season' until next Autumn. There can be no displays while the birds are moulting.

"R. T. Littlejohn reports he saw a male bird, which a few weeks ago was singing and dancing finely, sinking around without a tail.

"In a letter published recently a correspondent claimed that the mounted specimens of lyrebirds in the National Museum had their tails in the wrong positions. The protest is justified. These specimens were mounted many years ago when it was thought that male lyrebirds elevated their two large tail feathers into the form of a lyre. The fact is that these feathers fall out laterally when the bird is displaying itself. Lyre-shaped feathers in lyrebirds exist only in the minds of taxidermists of long ago and artists of today."

"Does Bill like to work?"
"He likes to do nothing better."

At Thursday's Patrol Leaders Meeting the Story of Lord Baden-Powell's early life will be told. All Leaders should come prepared to pass their further knowledge of the Guide Law and the third group of Morse Code. Next Friday special preparation for Miss McMahon's visit on the 27th will be made. Holbein Picture King Henry VIII. Known Important

LONDON, Oct. 18—One of the most important finds in the art world of recent years has occurred at Castle Howard, near York, the seat of the Hon. Geoffrey Howard, where there has come to light an undoubtedly authentic portrait of Henry VIII, by H. Holbein. This is the finest existing representation of the great Tudor King in the opinion of some of the highest art critics, who have examined it repeatedly since it has reached London.

The picture bears clear traces of Holbein's signature and of the date 1542. Dr. Paul Ganz has spent two years in removing the overlying coats of paint, which constitute successive attempts to "improve" the great painter's work. The portrait now looks as if it had been painted yesterday. According to the date upon it, it was painted in the year of the execution of Catherine Howard, the fifth wife of the much-married monarch, who, despite her protestations of innocence, went to the block with all the partners of her intrigues. Holbein, who was one of the few intimates of the King, depicts his sister as noticeably affected by the tragic infidelity of the Queen, whom, for a time at any rate, he sincerely loved.

In the National Portrait Gallery there has long been a portrait of Henry VIII by Luke Homebolt. It now seems clear that this is a copy of the recently discovered Holbein portrait.
