presumably to simulate the darkness of the April night in a Bronx cemetery when the fruitless ransom was paid by Dr. Condon with Lindbergh outside in his parked automobile.

That night the Colonel caught a fleeting glimpse of a man believed to have been a lookout for the ransom receiver.

Prisoner Brought In

The unshaven prisoner was brought into the room unshackled. Several persons spoke to him that the Colonel might hear the timbre of his voice. Hauptmann walked across the room in full view of all.

Colonel Lindbergh did not speak while Hauptmann was in the room. His face gave no hint of his emotions.

From the unusual "lineup," Hauptmann was taken to his arraignment on extortion charges and held on $100,000 bail. The arraignment on the indictment returned yesterday was a brief proceeding. Hauptmann spoke not a word.

PRESIDENT'S REPORT

The following annual report was submitted by the retiring president, Major F. B. Conrad:

Comrades:—

It seems just a few short months since our last annual meeting but a year has gone by—a year which has seen some changes—but a year which has not seen a great lessening of the many difficulties confronting the Canadian Legion.

The reports of the various committees, which have been presented to you tonight, give you a true perspective of the activities that have been carried out during the past year. The chairmen, especially of those committees, deserve our heartiest thanks for their work.

Our home is now in better condition than it has been for years, and most of the credit belongs to the Ladies Auxiliary, without whose help I do not think we could carry on.

Our relief expenditures this year show a large increase over preceding years. The administering of relief has become such a task that it is absolutely unfair to ask any one or two members to take charge of it, and some other method of distributing relief must be devised by your new executive. The situation as regards employment shows little change, and we must face the fact that there are very poor prospects of a number of ex-service men ever being in a position to support themselves and their families in this province. This being the case, are we carrying on our relief work in the right way, or are we endeavoring to do work which should be carried on by both Dominion and Provincial Governments?

Quotes General Ross

During the year we had a visit from our Dominion President, Gen. Alex. Ross. He is a man of outstanding ability and his addresses here were inspiring. I would like, if I may, to incorporate in this report some remarks he made recently in regard to membership.

"We know that in our large cities we have never attained anything approaching the maximum of strength. And here may I stress the point that, while we desire an increase of membership, quality and not quantity should be the determining factor. The Legion was organized to bring about unity among ex-service men and that must still be part of our fundamental policy. But enrollment of members does not constitute unity unless the members enrolled are willing to unite in common action, and herein lies the difficulty.

"There are many ex-service men who believe that a united body of ex-service men should be a militant body designed to enforce so-called "demands" on any governing body. They completely overlook the fact that any such institution is completely repugnant to British traditions and that the great majority of ex-service men believe implicitly in the British system of government and the British tradition which we cherish. You can organize a militant section of veteran opinion for the purpose stated but by so doing you will drive a much larger section to the defence of British principles and instead of having unity you will have complete and total disunion. On the other hand we do believe that we can make a strong appeal to all as a united body by working along proper constitutional lines and can secure by such means effective action in every matter affecting ex-service men when the case can be supported by sound reason and argument and is backed by a united body of veteran opinion, which will secure and hold the sympathy of the general public. This is the policy which the Legion has followed and we believe, effectively, and which, with a larger support, could be even more effective. In any event we must face facts and it can be accepted that we can never enroll the vast majority of the unorganized veterans by any policy other than that indicated.

"It is easy for those moving in a limited circle to say that the Legion would grow and develop if it became militant. Yes, it might add considerable numbers of those who believe in such a policy but what of the numbers it would lose? In the last few months I have travelled from one coast to the other. I have met thousands of ex-service men and my appreciation from the national standpoint is that a national Legion can only be developed on moderate lines which will secure the support of all reasonable men.

"And let me make it quite clear that we need that support. Our greatest need today is to break down the resistance of that large unorganized body. They are our greatest weakness. A great number of them are men well established, whose opinion carries weight. If they are lukewarm, or, as in some cases, openly hostile, the public may well ask "does the Legion really represent Veteran opinion?" Furthermore, they frequently give, unwittingly perhaps, aid to those who would attack our privileges by giving expressions to opinions as to pensions and privileges which appeal to the public imagination but which we, who understand the fundamental principles, know are quite erroneous. Then when they do run across a case of what seems to them an unjustifiable hardship, they blame the Legion for permitting such conditions to exist, forgetting that but for the Legion conditions would be much worse. It is only by getting them into our organization, giving them a first hand knowledge of our problems, that this may be overcome.

"Then we need them in our employment campaign. The unemployed can never solve the problem alone—it is only by the united effort of all those who are available and by working in co-operation with the government and with the civilian population that we can solve the ex-service man's problem of unemployment.

"For these reasons I urge that every branch make a determined effort to enroll every eligible man who is willing to support Legion policies and then provide the local machinery necessary to develop any scheme which may be determined upon. But let us also concentrate on maintaining a high standard of membership. By this I mean a membership of sincere, earnest men with no selfish interests to serve, and willing to cooperate in a common effort to help those who are in need of help. In my opinion the Legion is now big enough and strong enough to be independent, and trouble makers, mischief makers, and obstructionists have no place in the organization and should be so advised. Give the decent unemployed man every chance to retain his membership and his self-respect but give short shift to the agitator who by his actions keeps countless decent fellows out. Indiscreet speeches, unreasonable claims, and undesirable conduct on the part of a few members have done more to hinder the growth of our movement than any other thing.

"Then too you should find some means of keeping interest alive. The Legion is a service organization and every branch should have some special activity to keep members interested and alert and also show to the community that we are not a selfish lot, simply concerned with our own affairs but that we are also citizens keenly interested in the welfare of our country and of the community in which we live. By so doing we maintain our own strength and enlist that measure of public support which we feel is essential."

We all know just how true Brig. Ross's statements are, but how are we going to get those men into the Legion. Many of them have at one time or other belonged to our organization but have drifted away, others have merely been indifferent. Something must be done and done soon if the Legion is to function as it should.

Commends Executive

In conclusion I wish to express my sincere personal thanks to our efficient Secretary Treasurer, Comrade Walker. It has been a revelation to me the amount of detailed information which one must have to satisfactorily carry out the duties of his office.

It has been a pleasure to work with the rest of the executive and I want to thank each one for the splendid assistance they have given me.

Service to our less fortunate Comrades, forgetfulness of self and selfish interests and true comradeship, are essential if we are to reach our goal of Unity, Loyalty and Comradeship.

Prof. Lloyd Shaw Welcomed In Nfld.

ST. JOHN'S, Nfld., Sept. 27—The formal opening of the Memorial University College took place this afternoon. There was a large gathering of students, graduates of the college, parents and friends.

The chairman Dr. Burke, opened the meeting by welcoming Hon. Mr. Lodge, the Commissioner for Public Utilities, who, in the Hon. Mr. Alderdice's absence, is acting as Commissioner for Education, the members of the faculty in particular the two new members of the faculty, Professor Lloyd Shaw (formerly of Charlottetown, P.E.I.) and Mr. G. Alain Frecker. He heartily welcomed the students, many of whom have now entered the college for the first time. He announced that the Carnegie Corporation of New York had given the college the sum of $50,000, so that the college could be kept open for the next two years. He then requested the resident of the college Mr. A. G. Hatcher to deliver his address.

After cordially greeting the new students, Mr. Hatcher welcomed the new members of the Faculty. Professor Shaw is exceptionally well fitted for the work in the teachers' training department. He has had experience as a teacher in both elementary and high schools in Canada; he has been an inspector in city and in rural schools and has been head of the department of education at a university. A man of considerable experience in educational matters relating to countries outside Canada as well, he has made intensive studies in Denmark, Norway and Sweden. His particular interest in adult education can be shown from the fact that he was one of the founders of the "Canadian Adult Education Association."

The other new member of the Faculty is Mr. J. Alain Frecker who succeeds Mr. MacIntosh as lecturer in Engineering. He too is a man of wide culture, holding degrees in both Arts and Engineering.

Mr. Hatcher went on to say that the course in Physics had this year been reshaped and would now be more fitted to the needs of the students. The course in Botany had been made more advanced. The teacher-training course had been given careful consideration. A full year's work was now required and a higher standard than in former years would be realized since grade XI was a prerequisite for entrance to the training course. There would be no over-teaching. He emphasized the use of books which are so often lacking in our homes, the need for physical education, for household science, for biology and for the social sciences in the case of all who aspired to be good teachers.

Addresses were also given by other speakers.

Support Of Hospitals By The General Public Must Continue

Contributions by the generous hearted public towards the Prince Edward Island Hospital always have been necessary since the first hospital opened its doors 50 years ago, and it is likely that contributions by a like generous hearted public always will be necessary. Grants to hospitals from governments, provincial and municipal, in Prince Edward Island always have been and probably must continue to be on a much smaller per capita scale than in the larger, wealthier, and more populous provinces.

The Prince Edward Island Hospital is proud of its record of the past. It is proud of the most efficient new plant which it now has at its disposal for ministering to the sick and suffering of Charlottetown and of those country districts which it serves. The "Modern Hospital" magazine, published in New York C. had a very detailed description, profusely illustrated, of the new Prince Edward Island Hospital in its issue of March, 1934. The article was written by Dr. Charles T. Neergaard, hospital consultant of New York City, and in that description Dr. Neergaard said:

"In this Prince Edward Island Hospital, a hospital was designed that includes many special features not found in ordinary hospital construction and omits none of the essentials. Moreover, it was erected at a cost per bed far below that of the average building of comparable size and type. To no single item in the planning, construction and equipment can the low cost be attributed, but rather to an intensive and scientific study of the multitude of problems presented in the building of a hospital, to the provision of the maximum of usable area, and to the elimination of that money-consuming waste in space and equipment observable in far too many of our institutions, both new and old."

Next week, the first week of October, the first annual collection since 1932 for maintaining the work of the Prince Edward Island Hospital is to be taken up in Charlottetown. Since 1923, two campaigns have been conducted to provide the very large amount of money needed for the construction of the new building.

Many of the contributors to the last campaign, conducted in the year 1930 made a one payment, cash contribution, at that time. Those have not been approached to give anything since. Many others, in 1930 pledged themselves to make payments covering a period of two years or more, and the great majority of those completed their payments last year, or at an earlier date. Some, particularly affected by adverse circumstances have been struggling ever since 1930 to complete the promises which they then made. All are asked to do what they can next week to swell the collection in order that the magnificent work which the Prince Edward Island Hospital is doing for this community may be continued without hindrance.

INTEREST

its rights in seeking amendments to the act the assumption would be that no amendments would be urged of a nature likely to affect the provinces unfavorably nor without consultation. Nevertheless it is maintained no province or provinces would be in a position to veto proposed amendments.

Sir Richard McBride when Premier of British Columbia, made determined efforts to block certain amendments with respect to subsidies sought by the Federal Government. While there was considerable delay the amendments were passed.

Should the provinces agree, at the forthcoming conference, to surrender some of their rights laid down in the B. N. A. it would probably be only with strict reservations so that matters concerning race and religion could not be dealt with by the Federal authority.

Strong Opposition

There is every likelihood, however, that strong opposition will arise, particularly in Ontario and Quebec and possibly in British Columbia, to any interference with the act except by unanimous agreement, particularly with respect to hours of work, the minimum wage and with taxing privileges.

The pressing need of amendment arose out of the difficulties surrounding unemployment relief and similar social problems encountered particularly in recent years. An unemployment insurance scheme has been demanded from all quarters with growing force, and one is ready for presentation at the next session of parliament.

But for such a scheme to perform adequately the functions for which it is designed uniform adoption and application in each of the nine provinces would be required. Unless an amendment were adopted to the constitution the Dominion Government would not be authorized under the constitution to enforce or impose the provisions of the act upon any province.

Furnishing Funds

While the Dominion has been furnishing the bulk of the relief funds and playing a large part in their administration during the last four years of depression it has no constitutional right to deal in any way with the privations of a people unless specifically invited to do so by the Government of the Province in which they reside.

No control of wage and working conditions is constitutionally possible by the Federal Government and, in British Columbia, Hon. G. S. Pearson, Minister of Labor, stated as recently as last Tuesday that his province would be reluctant to surrender to the Dominion Government control of [illegible] could labor regulations.

Prime Minister R. B. Bennett, Rt. Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, leader of the opposition and James Woodsworth, leader of a large section of the third political group in the House of Commons are all on record as being of the opinion amendments to the constitution are long overdue.

The British Parliament undoubtedly, would be favorable to whatever plan of procedure the various sections of the Dominion could

KING TO SAIL WITH LAPOINTE FOR EUROPE

Will Visit Great Britain and Continent, Seeking "First Hand Information."

(C. P. By Guardian's Special Wire)

OTTAWA, Sept. 27. — Rt. Hon. Mackenzie King, Dominion Liberal leader, and Hon. Ernest Lapointe, former Minister of Justice, will sail for the United Kingdom on Saturday from Quebec on the Empress of Britain, Mr. King made the announcement tonight.

"Canadian affairs are increasingly bound up in world affairs and we are anxious to get first hand information as to conditions in Britain and in Europe," Mr. King explained. "It is doubtful if there will be another opportunity for some time to come to make such a visit."

The trip will be of a private nature but Mr. King hopes to obtain the views of the better informed people in the United Kingdom and in countries on the continent as to possibilities for trade expansion. These questions were of ever increasing importance to Canada.

The Liberal leader has not been overseas since 1928 when he signed the Kellog-Briand Peace Pact in Paris. He will be absent for a month or six weeks.

While United Kingdom will be thoroughly explored first, Mr. King expects to have considerable time to travel in the continent before he returns to Canada.

PRAISES CIVIC U. S. AVIATION

(By The Canadian Press)

NEW YORK, Sept. 27—Mrs. H. B. Tate, member of the British House of Commons, on arriving here told interviewers she believed civil aviation in England was inferior to that in the United States. She ventured that the best method of advancing civil aviation was to "get the women interested in it—once women generally have a desire to fly and own aeroplanes, aviation will go forward by leaps and bounds."

With her husband, who is a big game hunter, Mrs. Tate flew to the Pacific Coast.

COURT IGNORES LAD'S REFUSAL

(By The Canadian Press)

ALDERSHOT, England, Sept. 27—A pretty girl of 18, who could not obtain her father's consent to her marriage to Robert Bowler, 22 year old trooper of the 5th Inniskilling Dragoons, was given permission by the magistrates to marry.

Elizabeth said she had been courted three years and her mother was perfectly agreeable to the wedding.

Our deeds still travel with us from afar, and what we have been makes us what we are.
