"Each empty spool represents a roll of film developed by us." Such is the printed sign which appears in the Prince Street window of Johnson & Johnson's drugstore. The bottom of the large window is covered to a depth of several inches with empty spools which for many years were rolled with photographic film, and that the film is kept busy in their developing and printing department is quite evident from the number displayed. The whole is surmounted by a large representation of a Kodak film standing over two feet high on which is printed "Let us develop your films."
