SANDRA THE JEALOUS
By Jane Phelps

SANDRA REBELS.

Chapter XXII

I clenched my hands, I commenced to sob. I wouldn't be a good wife, and I wouldn't have children; he had no right to love that other woman, that Leola, when I was his wife. In my distress I forgot that he would be angry if he found me in tears. And gave full vent to my feelings. He was in the room before I had heard him.

"What are you crying about?" he asked, "Does your head still ache?"

The idea that after he had talked to me as he had just a little while before he could ask what I was crying about. I just didn't answer at all; I only cried the harded.

"You will make yourself ill," his voice was not quite so kind.

"What made you marry me when you didn't love me? You don't love me now;" I stormed. I wanted to say "when you love that other woman," but didn't dare.

"I certainly shall not love you if you do not stop crying," his voice stern with displeasure. "I thought I told you I disliked a crybaby."

As I tried to control myself I wondered if Leola never had cried. If she had always laughed and that was the reason he loved her so.

Suddenly there came to me once again my foolish bragging speech to Rose Grandon: "He is crazy to marry me."

He might have been. Surely all his gifts and attentions looked that way. But now I knew why he wanted to marry me. Then I thought it was because he loved me. Now I knew it wasn't. A good wife and children, how I wished he hadn't said that, that he had pretended he married me for love. She, Leola, was dead. It wouldn't have hurt him and I wouldn't have been quite so miserable even after I knew of her if he had let me go on thinking he had loved me.

I stopped sobbing. Then to my surprise Everett leaned over the bed and kissed me softly.

"Be a good little girl and go to sleep. You'll spoil your looks unless you do."

Before I could say a word, he had left the room and closed the door. He had not answered my question, neither had he contradicted me when I had declared he didn't love me.

But someway his kiss, his sudden gentle speech comforted me, and utterly worn out I soon slept.

Once more he had gone to the office without kissing me good bye. I realized when Hetty brought my coffee and told me that Mr. Graham said I was not to be disturbed.

"You are worrying ma'am. I feel very sorry I told you anything."

"You needn't feel sorry, Hetty. Mr. Graham told me all about it, and it wasn't half as bad as I imagined. I didn't know she was dead."

"You thought,—she hung her words in air, horror in her tones.

"I thought she had divorced him or something; that maybe he was a bigamist. I don't know what I thought! I only know that we must not talk about it because I gave him my promise not to. But I felt so lonely, so alone and forlorn that on one pretext and another I kept Hetty with me until Mrs. Gray called her. She was young too, if she was a servant, and a dainty, pretty girl also.

About 11 o'clock the telephone rang. It was Everett.

"Meet me at Lipman's—a large fashionable shop—at three o'clock. I saw a coat in the window I admired, and if it is becoming I want it for you." He did not wait for an answer, but immediately hung up.

How arbitrary he was. He had not asked me if I had any plans, or if I could meet him. He had simply ordered me to be there. I didn't care if it were to do something nice for me, I would insist that he stop treating me like a child. I surely felt old enough these last few days—"Methuselah had nothing on me." I thought as I sighed heavily, so heavily that Mrs. Gray who had just come up stairs asked if I was sure I felt able to get up.

I assured her that I was all right, and repeated Everett's message to her.

"Your husband is very generous. Not many girls marry men who are so free with their money."

"Money isn't everything," I said sententiously. I had heard dad say that.

"It is a good deal, my dear. Not that I think it is everything, but there are few things in life that a competence, the ability to gratify ones desire does not help. At least having pretty clothes and a beautiful home helps to take your mind from other things which may not be so pleasant. Mr. Graham's taste is exquisite. I am sure the coat will be a lovely one. Rest a little longer so that you may look fresh and rested when you meet him."

"Why should I care how I look when he dosen't love me." I grumbled after she left me, but I nevertheless did as she had suggested, and remained in bed until nearly time for lunch.

I did look rested. Better than I had looked for days. And when she told me so, she added: "Mr. Graham will be pleased."

Tormorrow—Everett and Sandra go shopping.

Parliament to Consider Its Naval Policy

OTTAWA, July 23.—Naval matters are likely to engage the attention of Parliament to some extent at the next regular sitting of the House which will open during the winter months. Some time ago Admiral Jellico was named by the Imperial government to confer with the governments of the overseas Dominions as to the best policy for them to adopt in the light of what was revealed by the war. Admiral Jellicoe will be a visitor to the Dominion this autumn, when the matter of after-the-war naval developments will be discussed by him. It is not likely that any concrete conclusions will be arrived at in time for the announcement by the government of a permanent naval policy at the special autumn session to be convened early in October, but it is regarded as more than likely that legislation dealing with the matter, will be introduced at the winter session. There is little disposition to speculate here as to what the permanent nava lpolicy of the Dominion will be, but in view of the demonstration during the war of the ability of modern submarine craft to operate at a great distance from their home bases, it is thought that provision will have to be made for an adequate system of coast defence.

Summerside Convention of W. M. S.

The annual meeting of the Summerside District Con. of the W. M. S. was held in the Methodist church, Bedeque, July 17. Perfect weather induced a large number of delegates and visitors to assemble from the various places. At the morning session Rev. Mr. Somers conducted the devotional exercises and spoke words of greeting to the Con. and commendation of the work of the W.M.S. A choir of girls led the singing. The district superintendent, Mrs. (Rev.) W. A. Thomson, then took the chair and reports were received from eighteen auxiliaries, the majority of which had representatives present, two Circles and four Bands. All showed signs of growth. As dinner was announced the remaining Band reports were left till the afternoon. But just before adjourning the Branch Cor. Sec., Mrs. P. S. Enman, of Port Elgin, N.B., was called to the platform and the convention rose in a body as Mrs. Enman greeted her fellow-workers.

At the afternoon session more than one hundred delegates and visitors were present. The remaining twelve Bands were heard from and in most cases told of good work being done. A Model Mission Band meeting was conducted by Mrs. John Frizzle. A number of short papers were read—"How Shall We Recruit for the Mission Field," by Mrs. Herbert Lord; "The Mission of a Mite Box," by Mrs. Sharp; "Christian Stewardship," by Mrs. Wm. Callbeck; a short talk on "Ruts," by Mrs. Joseph Wright; Miss Winnie Smith told something of "What Our Missionaries are Doing in the Foreign Field" and Miss Elma Inman of "What Our Missionaries are Doing in Canada." One who often attends conventions remarked that they "had never listened to such bright, brainy papers. Interspersed with these was a solo "Is it Nothing to You?" by Mrs. Jenkins, and a duet "Somebody Needs You," by Miss Wright and Mrs. Jenkins. Mrs. Enman addressed the meeting on different phases of the work. A Question Box was opened and the answers cleared up many perplexing points. Mrs. Thomson was unanimously elected District Supt. for the coming year. The minutes of morning and afternoon sessions were read and adopted. The Con. again adjourned to the school room of the church where tables were spread with an abundance of good things.

A large audience gathered at the evening session and the church was beautifully decorated with cut flowers. The music rendered by the choir was of a high order. Special mention might be made of a quartette "Jesus Shall Reign" by Mrs. Jenkins, Mrs. Green and Messrs. Moyse and Fraser. The District Supt. in her address referred to the sunshine and shadows of the past year. There had been an increase in funds, membership and interest, but hindrances caused by the "flu," smalpox and the many vacancies made by the Angel of Death. One new auxiliary had been organized at Hunter River. Freetown gave the largest amount per capita, over ten dollars from each member. What would be the result of an equal number offered for the Lord's work as those who freely gave themselves for the saving of the Empire? Let each one pray "May reconstruction begin in my life." United effort is the kind that tells.

Mrs. Enman also addressed the meeting and gave the amount raised by the N. B. & P.E.I. branch last year, $17,400; increase $2,700. But with such strength this is no time to rest, but rather say, "We will go up and possess the land," trusting in the power of Him "Whose we are and Whom we serve." The 27 missionaries in Japan, 19 in China and 39 in Canada convey to the mind homes brightened and lives uplifted. Christ is the only hope of the world. The objective for next year is twenty per cent. increase in funds and members, and twenty new missionaries.

Mrs. Thomson extended the thanks of the Con. to the ladies of Bedeque for their great hospitality, to Rev. Mr. Somers for the help given by him, to the organist, Miss Schurman, and to the choir for the efficient services rendered by them.

This very successful convention was then brought to a close.
