TO WOMEN OF MIDDLE AGE

Mrs. Wilson's Experience a Guide to Women Passing through the Change of Life

Hamilton, Ontario.—"I have taken several bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I cannot speak too highly of it as I was at the Change of Life and was all run-down and had no appetite. I was very weak and sick, and the pains in my back were so bad I could hardly move. I got very sad at times and thought I had not a friend on earth. I did not care if I lived or died. I was very nervous, too, and did not go out very much. A friend advised me to try a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, so I did. I am a farmer's wife, and always worked hard until lately, and was in bed for two months. I began to feel like a new woman after the first bottle and I recommend it with great success, also Lydia E. Pinkham's Liver Pills. I am willing to answer letters from women asking about your medicines, as I cannot speak too highly of them."—Mrs. EMMA WILSON, 471 Wilson Street, Hamilton, Ontario.

The Unwilling Adventuress

BY MILDRED BARBOUR

CONCERNING THE ACTION AND CHARACTERS:

Shortly after the death of his wife known to the operatic world as Elaine Vanessa Edgar MacKay disappears, abandoning their baby in a railway station while enroute to visit his wife's aunt, Miss Elsie Young. The child, DORIS, is claimed and reared by Miss Young, who is determined to give her an operatic career, since she has inherited her mother's exquisite voice. A youthful and innocent escapade makes Doris the subject of gossip and her aunt decides to send her to New York to study.

PREPARING THE FLEDGLING

As a matter of fact Doris, did not leave for New York and the pursuance of her career on the following day, as her aunt had proclaimed.

She woke up with a slight cold and lay in bed, fussed over and coddled by her fighting relative, with broths and jellies and custards on a tray beside her, and the town newspaper, recounting her miraculous escape from death or injury, across her lap.

Miss Elsie was just as well content to postpone the departure. She came of the old school which considers it mildly indecent to send its fledglings out into the world, (either of matrimony or adventure), without at least "a dozen of everything" carefully stitched and embroidered and lace-trimmed by hand.

This requires time, and for days Miss Elsie assisted by her next-door neighbor, Miss Foster, sewed diligently in the cool sitting room behind the front parlor, where Doris mechanically and languidly trilled scales.

"I declare, Elsie, I don't see how you can afford this piece of extravagance—sending Doris to New York to study," Miss Foster remarked. "It's going to cost like all get-out."

"I guess I know what it'll cost," replied Miss Elsie grimly. "D.dn't I start Doris' mother on the same road? But, if you want to know the truth—and I'm afraid you'll just with curiosity until I tell you—Elaine left me something when she died. It wasn't much—I guess opera singers don't know the meaning of saving. But I do, and I've never spent a penny of it and got more than a third of my own little income, all these years. I was saving it for Doris. The Lord didn't see fit to give me beauty or talent, but he certainly was generous with Elaine and her daughter. As I see it, the only reason for my being put on this earth was to give Doris the chance she was meant to have, and I'll work and scrimp till I drop."

The other woman sighed.

"I never knew you felt like that, Elsie. You always seem kind of-of-matter-of-fact. Anyway, I'll bet Doris won't thank you for the chance you're going to give her. She don't care that much about singing."

"I guess that's my own business," snapped Miss Elsie.

But her friend was not to be diverted from the ever-interesting subject.

"Living's expensive in New York, they tell me," she vouchafed tentatively.

Miss Elsie looked at her over the rim of her glasses and smiled shrewdly.

"You want to know how I'm managing it, don't you, Ellen? Well, I'll tell you so it can get around town and save people trouble. Doris is going to stay with Camilla Fielding and her husband. You remember Camilla, don't you?"

"Camilla Drew, that was? The daughter of your cousin Rosa?"

"Her," nodded Miss Elsie.

"I guess so do remember," said Miss Foster shrilly. "Little stuck-up piece! Many's the time $ used to wash her face for her and give her a piece of bread and jam—you know yourself your cousin Rosa was a right shiftless housekeeper. And what thanks do I get for it? The high and mighty Camilla passes through here on her way back from her honeymoon trip and when I meet her and somebody says: 'You remember Miss Ellen Foster, don't you, Camilla?', she just hangs onto her rich husband's arm and looks at me indifferent and says: 'Oh yes, I've heard of Miss Foster'—putting on airs because I'd been helping with the Ladies' Aid Society dinner and was still wearing my gingham apron. Camilla Fielding—humph!"

"Well, Camilla's got a right to be a bit stuck-up," said her cousin. "She made a grand match. Her husband's older than she is, but he's awful rich and she's got a fine home in New York."

"I'll bet she leads him a dance," declared Miss Foster maliciously. "Don't tell me that Camilla's going to take Doris in and give her a home?

"Not exactly," confessed Miss Elsie. "But she said, in a letter I had from her secretary that Doris could live in her big house and save room rent."

A fortnight later, Doris, trim and smart, stepped aboard the local bound for Weyburn Junction. She wore the correct one-piece frock of beige cloth, beige silk hose and high-heeled bronzed sandals. A tiny cloche of bronze felt framed her exquisite, little face, accentuating its creamy pallor and making her green eyes greener than ever. A really lovely bit of mink, cut from an old cape of Miss Elsie's into the fashionable "choker" size, encircled her slim throat. She carried a huge, flat purse and a neat little travelling bag.

Miss Elsie had given good account of her stewardship. With the satisfaction of a task well done, she launched this bit of feminine perfection into a world of which she knew little.

Doris waved goodbye to the home folks with a handkerchief damp with her tears, until the train rounded a curve and shut the familiar station from view. She cried most of the way to Weyburn Junction, but later forgot her woe in the really delightful luncheon she carried in a cardboard box. There were also doughnuts. She had won a prize at the church festival with her doughnuts.

At Weyburn Junction, she was thrilled by the crowd and deeply engrossed in the transfer of a dingy, little road circus from one train to another. Finally she had to scamper for her own train.

Of course, she took the wrong one—going West, instead of East!

Urge Calling Conference On Immigration

OTTAWA. Nov. 13.—The calling of an immigration conference at the earliest opportunity was suggested to Hon. Robert Forke, minister of immigration, yesterday. The suggestion was made by representatives of welfare organizations of Protestant churches, who waited upon Mr. Forke.

The delegates were of the belief that the conference should include representatives of the Dominion and provincial governments, the churches all voluntary organizations interested in immigration and the transportation companies.

The fullest possible development of the policy of preferential British immigration to Canada was also urged upon the minister. Co-operation of the churches and organizations represented, in aiding the department and in providing for the welcome and welfare of settlers coming to Canada, was assured.

At the conclusion of the discussion Mr. Forke intimated that he would take the suggestions of the delegates into consideration.

FORESEES ENGLISH IN UNIVERSAL USE

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., Nov. 15.—"The next fifty years will see the universal use of the English language," is the belief of Dr. W. E. Lingelbach, of the University of Pennsylvania, who spoke before the members of the National Advertisers' Association here yesterday.

The industrial supremacy of Britain and the United States, as well as the aggressive attitude of visitors from those countries, was responsible for the widespread and continued use of English in schools and shops, he said.

Dr. Lingelbach has just returned from an expedition to Europe for the purpose of investigating the retarded development of social sciences. Dr. Lingelbach said, "Unless the tendency toward internationalism, which exists in Europe to-day, becomes stronger, the next war would wipe out half of the earth.

POTATOES IN BRITAIN

Great Britain's potato crop this year is now officially estimated at about 3,630,000 tons, as against 4,209,000 tons last year. As 4,000,000 tons is regarded as the normal quantity consumed, the ministry of agriculture states that "it may well be that prices will rise high enough to attract considerable imports from the continent, as in the two seasons 1923-24 and 1924-25."

Address And Presentation

When it became known that Miss Eugenie DesRoches who for the past four years was employed in the firm of Messrs. Arsenault & Gaudet, was leaving Richmond for Somerville, Mass., to resume a position there, her many friends assembled at the home of Miss Mary Pendleton to bid her farewell and present her with an address and purse. The ladies served lunch and spent a very pleasant evening dancing and singing. Miss Beatrice Gillis presented the gift and Miss Vera MacDonald read the following address:—

Dear Eugenie: Having learned with sincere regret that you are about to leave Richmond we, your friends, are assembled here tonight to give expression to the sorrow we feel at your departure from our midst. It is hard at all times to say farewell, but when there is a question of parting with those whom we have learned to love for their many excellent qualities of heart, it makes the loss more bitter still. During your stay with us you were ever ready to assist in anything pertaining to the welfare of the community; ever willing to lend a helping hand to those in need. It is therefore with regret that we see you leave our midst. But ere we say goodbye we ask you to accept this gift, not for any value attached to it, but as a souvenir of many happy days spent together and the many friends you have made in dear old Richmond.

The aged watchmen who hold forth at the entrance of buildings under construction in the metropolis appear none too robust. One of their principal duties is to clear the way for workmen and the trucks that bring materials or haul away debris. This they do with an authorative air.

Our Heritage The Empire

OBSERVATIONS MADE ON A TOUR IN THE DOMINIONS

BY COMMISSIONER D. C. LAMB

Under the title of "Our Heritage—The Empire" Commissioner D. C. Lamb, director of the Migration and Settlement work of the Salvation Army, who within recent months returned from a tour in the overseas Dominions undertaken at the request of General Booth, and with the "benediction" of the Dominions Department of the British Government, for the purpose of surveying and investigating conditions with respect to migration, has embodied the conclusions derived from his observations. These are contained partly in the report he submitted to General Booth on his return, and partly in a paper he read before the Royal Colonial Institute in London.

General Booth writes a foreword to "Our Heritage—The Empire" in which he says, "So far as the British Empire is concerned it seems to me important to remember that, if notwithstanding our needs the genius of the British Empire should fail to fill the vacant spaces within the Empire with people of British stock, we cannot deny the rights of other nations to go in and capture the land."

LAGGARDS IN MIGRATION

Commissioner Lamb, who is regarded as one of the most important authorities on Migration and Overseas Settlement, is at one with this view. In this book he says, "We are slow to take up and develop our great inheritance overseas—we do not spend the money devoted to that end, and that is little enough", thereby asserting that the money, £3,000,000 per annum, which was voted by Parliament for the migration of British people to the Dominions has not been drawn upon to the extent it might have been considering the over-crowding and industrial depression which has existed in this country for a number of years. He further states that we are adding to our population at least 1,000 daily, and to set off this we ought at a conservative estimate to emigrate at least 250,000 persons annually whereas last year we only emigrated 85,398.

THE REMEDY

As a remedy for this state of things Commissioner Lamb suggests a "new and really acute" migration policy in which Dominion Statesmen would co-ordinate. He advocates a scheme for intensive training for land work which would fit inexperienced men to start work on the land overseas similarly as men were hastily made ready for the war.

"For the purposes of peace" he asks, "Shall we do less than we did with the little enough preparation for the purposes of war? If men and women can be shown that overseas there awaited a job and a welcome they will be willing enough to go, but they must not go untrained." The Commissioner favours the group settlement in migration which has its fullest expression in the scheme adopted by the state of Western Australia.

He further states that in every corner of the Empire he has found vast tracts of land capable of close settlement which only required the labour of willing workers to develop its potential richness.

OPENINGS FOR PARTLY TRAINED MEN

In reporting to General Booth the Commissioner says, "One object of my tour was to find out what openings there would be in the Overseas Dominions for partly-trained married men with families between the ages of 30 and 40. The scheme you provisionally approved before I left London contemplated taking men whose careers had been deflected by the war and post-war conditions and by intensive training in agriculture teaching them to milk and to plough. I am confirmed in the possibility of quickly equipping these men—the same men who by a few months intensive training for war were turned out competent soldiers—for useful and productive work Overseas. Hundreds of such families could be absorbed under existing Government Schemes."

GREAT DEMAND FOR BOYS

With regard to boys Commissioner Lamb says "There is abundant evidence in all parts of the Empire of an almost insatiable demand for such boys as we have been sending out. They can be quickly absorbed by thousands. They are welcome because they are adaptable, they fit readily into the economic and social life Overseas, and they carry with them a breath of the Homeland." Commissioner Lamb attributes the success of the boys who are settled Overseas under General Booth's Boys Scheme to the training they get at the Army's farms at Hadleigh, Essex, where they are "innoculated with land sense." The training farms at Hadleigh he adds can only deal with about 1,000 boys per annum and he suggests that the Government might well set up 100 "Hadleighs" without delay and keep them busy for the next ten years.

HOME INFLUENCES WANTED

With regard to the 'women's' side of Migration work Commissioner Lamb says, "We found a strong call for women in all the Overseas Dominions to take their share in the management and eventually in the establishment of homes. We met at reunion meetings many women young and old who had emigrated through the Army and we were especially gratified with their obvious happiness, healthy appearance and prosperous circumstance. The absence of the right type of women if allowed to persist will react adversely against migration generally for the lack of home influences, a potent factor in all settlement problems, will ultimately lead to discontent and loss of incentive. It is vital to the well-being of the whole Empire that this matter should be dealt with promptly and sagaciously along wise and generous lines."

SPECIAL COMMISSION ADVOCATED

Finally the Commissioner says to General Booth "It is nearly two years since you publicly advocated the setting up of some authority composed of capable and experienced men who would be free from political pressure. I am confirmed in the need of a special Commission who would undertake all work incidental to the selection, transportation and settlement of migrants—working with or without existing organisations, co-operating with Overseas Governments, but prepared to work independently. Of course all the settlers would be selected in harmony with the regulations of the Overseas Governments as to physical, mental and moral fitness; and no one would be sent Overseas until adequate reception and settlement arrangements had been made.

Mrs. Lamb, J. P., who accompanied the Commissioner on his missions writes an interesting chapter on "Some Impressions of our Tour."

FARMERS TO MAKE NEW EFFORT FOR LAWS TO THEIR LIKING

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 16.—Conferences on farm relief will be held here in a short time by a number of the House and Senate members who will soon arrive in Washington to make plans for the coming session.

Representative Dickinson of Iowa, one of the agricultural leaders now en route to Washington, has already declared the purpose of himself and corn belt members generally to press for farm relief legislation. The McNary-Haughen Bill with some changes will be urged.

Some of the agricultural leaders believe the Coolidge Administration which has suffered a setback in the defeat of Senator Butler in Massachusetts, will now be more amenable to the wishes of the agricultural West, but there is no indication that the President will support the McNary-Haughen Bill.

TERMS ANNOUNCED AT SALE

Statement of Owner:

As my herd of pure-breds has become too large for my farm, I shall sell about 50 head of various ages to suit purchasers on Nov. 17th. I pesonally selected the foundations of my herd in Oxford Co., Ontario, buying the tops at the Oxford Co. Club Sales on three occasions and have bred to a bull of the famous Snow family, noted the world over for excellent production and type. My cattle have taken numerous prizes in milk tests and show ring and have officially recorded high percentages of fat in the milk. My herd is fully accredited not having had a reactor since the test began six years ago and the general health of the herd is excellent in every respect. Most of the cattle offered have official backing and some have official records. Many of the young heifers offered can be developed into great cows and no better foundation stock can be secured anywhere.
