MARLBOROUGH HEIR LONDON SHOPKEEPER

LONDON, May 18—(C.P.)—The fortune and vast estates of the Duke of Marlborough, the 35 year old Marquess of Blandford is the latest English aristocrat to turn shopkeeper. He is the eldest son of the ninth Duke of Marlborough by his first wife, the former Consuelo Vanderbilt of New York, who divorced the Duke in 1920 and married Colonel Jacques Malsam of France the following year. Meat, poultry, eggs and butter from his estate of Lovesby Hall, Leicestershire, form the basis of the new venture, and the Marquess has opened up attractive premises in the heart of London's fashionable Mayfair for their sale. Good business was reported. Lord Blandford explained that he has been running his country farm for about six years, primarily to provide work for the estate hands. "During that time I sold most of the produce to a number of London stores," he said, "then some of my friends suggested that I open a store. "Already we are doing good business, and the first day we had to send post haste to the farm for another supply of butter. This is rather remarkable because we charge high prices for it. But customers are allowed to taste the butter and they realize it is very good. "And," the shopkeeper who is heir to 20,000 acres and a former Guards captain said proudly, "our eggs are never more than two days old."

Visitors Of Olden Days

LONDON, Ont., May 18—(C.P.)—Peggy Wadson in the London Free Press tells of itinerant visitors to the farms in the old days:

"For instance, there was Gypsy May, who came along yearly, her dark skin brightened by gray handkerchief or dangling earrings, and carrying most fascinating treasures in her capacious sack of wares. 'Buy a bit of nice lace, lady?' she would ask in ingratiating tones. Or, 'Want a pretty ribbon for the little girl?' Visitors were none too frequent in those days and almost invariably the farmhouse door would be opened to Gypsy May and seldom did she depart without leaving behind her the bit of nice lace, or the pretty ribbon, or anyway, a spool of thread and paper of pins, while the farm women's hard-earned pennies jingled in her purse. "Another day it would be a dusky Red Skin and his squaw who trod softly along the road, he, his arms well filled with axe handles, walking a few steps in advance of the woman and her burden of hand-made baskets. "The itinerant tinker was another visitor whose advent was generally welcomed by the dweller in remote rural parts. This personage usually drove a horse and buckboard and paid for overnight accommodation by soldering household utensils, riveting harness and such like jobs. He also carried a supply of new tinware and the housewife was loath to see him depart without lightening his load by at least one shiny new pail or bread pan or dish of some sort. Perhaps no less looked forward to was the annual visit of the rag man, who also carried a quantity of tinware and other kitchen utensils, which he exchanged for the year's gathering of clippings and rags, old iron or rubbers. "Kodaks and snapshots were unheard of things in those days. If one wanted one's 'likeness taken' it meant rising with the lark and making a trip to the city, often behind a team and wagon, over rough roads. Hence, when some enterprising man hit on the scheme of going out into the rural sections with his camera and photographing not only one, but every member of the household, with the old farm home for a background thrown in, the idea quickly became popular. The travelling photographer was added to the list of transient callers and usually found business satisfactory. "Then, of course, there were various kinds of agents—peddlars who were called in those days, who, if they didn't travel in automobiles, probably used much the same line of sales talk as the men of today. Spectacle peddlars were

Cancer—Its Cause and Control

(By Dr. B. C. Keeping)

What is Cancer? Briefly, Cancer is an uncontrolled growth, or rather overgrowth, of certain tissues of the body. Practically all tissues may be affected by one or other of the various forms of the disease, but the point I wish to emphasize is that Cancer growth is always, in the first instance, a purely local condition. Medical science has not yet determined the true cause of the disease, if it can be assumed there is only one common cause for all forms of the condition. It is known and recognized, however, that chronic irritations of various kinds bear a very definite relation to the development of Cancer in certain areas—as in the case of Cancer of the mouth, skin, and certain internal organs. Many investigators have suspected or condemned certain forms of dietary indiscretions in connection with stomach and intestinal cancers, but no proof of this theory exists at present, other than Cancer has increased among civilized peoples, with the attending changes of diet which invariably accompany civilization. Cancer can best perhaps be described as an accelerated local growth of certain cells of the body tissues, without any organized control, into tumors, with gradual invasion into other tissues of the body. The preliminary report of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics indicates that in 1928 the death rates per 100,000 of population for the provinces of Canada were as follows:

SENTIMENTAL POETRY GIVES WAY TO HARD, STERN COMMON SENSE

NEW YORK, May 18—An agreement of Manhattan ministers not to quote "sentimental poetry about motherhood" in their sermons yesterday, but to demand that the roofs not be taken from over the heads of thousands of New York City mothers facing eviction this month was disclosed by Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick. "This is Mother's Day, on which we ministers are commonly supposed to speak with lovely sentiment about motherhood," the preacher said as he spoke from the pulpit of the Riverside Church, built largely with funds contributed by John D. Rockefeller.

"The stern fact is, however, that in this supposedly civilized city thousands of mothers are facing eviction this month. Private charity has broken down; the City Government has broken down; public notice has been given that no more money is available to save mothers and children from eviction; and in consequence a flood of dispossessed notices already has been let loose. "Thousands of mothers, therefore, on Mother's Day are facing the imminent loss of even shelter for their children, nothing can save them, so far as I can see, except an overwhelming public demand that in this emergency the City Government simply must not break down."

CHILDREN MUST MAINTAIN PARENTS

WINNIPEG, May 18—(C.P.)—The act for maintenance of parents by their children is new legislation of the session of the Legislature just ended, providing that parents who are indigent shall be assisted by their children when the latter in the opinion of a court or magistrate are in a financial position to do so.

Student Explores Grand Stairway

KNOX, N. Y. May 18—(A.P.)—A "grand stairway" carved out of bedrock by water flowing many centuries was reported today by Duana Featherstonough, college freshman, who recently explored alone in extensive series of little known underground caverns here.

He described how his second trip into the caverns this week disclosed the "grand stairway," whose ceiling he estimated to be 100 feet high. Featherstonough is a geology student at Union College. "The 'stairway' is a broad, sloping passage leading off from a great central chamber," he said. He reached the chamber by squirming through a narrow crevice 60 feet underground. "It appeared to be about 50 feet wide and 150 feet long. The light of my flashlight shone dimly on the ceiling, and I estimated it to be at least 100 feet above where I stood." The caves are underneath a section of the Heldeberg mountains
