

No More Piles

How to End Painful Piles Without Salves or Cutting

It takes only one bottle of Dr. J. S. Leonard's prescription—HEM-ROID to prove how easy it is to end itching, bleeding or protruding piles. This internal remedy acts quickly even in old, stubborn cases. HEM-ROID succeeds because it heals and restores the affected parts and drives out the thick impure blood in the lower bowel—the cause of piles. Only an internal medicine can do this, that's why salves and suppositories fail. Hughes Drug Co., Ltd., and druggists everywhere sell HEM-ROID Tablets with guarantee of money back if they do not end all Pile misery.

HAITI WILL BE CALLED HISPANIOLA IN FUTURE

WASHINGTON, Aug. 15—The Island of Haiti hereafter will be known as Hispaniola, the name which it went by in the buccanering days.

The change was made by the United States Geographic Board, due to a confusion of names among residents of the island.

Citizens of the Haitian republic have called the island Haiti, and citizens of the Dominican republic, living on part of the island, have referred to it as Santo Domingo.

Columbus first named the island "La Isla Espanola." Later the name was Latinized into Hispaniola, as it was known until 1804, when the republic of Haiti was formed.

HEARTS AFIRE

By MARY CHRISTIE

CHAPTER 16

Another Prince Charming

Prudence ran down the drive that led away from Winston Towers, like one possessed.

Burning humiliation, at that moment, quite eclipsed her pain over Bert Traymore's defection. Hatred! Hatred!

Never again would she walk inside its portals. Its guests were vain and callous and self-centered, and just because her frock was badly made, and she didn't happen to be 'in their set', they had ignored her!

Even her hostess had been rude? Why, why had she been invited? Perhaps it was some scheme of Miss Virginia Dale's, to show her—Prudence Page—that the gay world had but little time for country bumpkins, who didn't know the ropes, and who were ignorant of the latest dance-steps, and the sort of airy persiflage that's graced by the name of 'conversation' at these functions!

Lombardy poplars edged the carriage-drive, standing stiffly in the moonlight, and a gentle breeze was fluttering the young amber leaves. It made an eerie sort of sighing . . . fitting accompaniment to her mood.

A point of light was coming up the drive, and Prudence slackened her mad run, crossing over to the grass so that her foot steps wouldn't make a sound.

To get away from the scene of her humiliation as quickly and as quietly as possible, was her one ambition.

She swerved at right angles, making for a privet hedge that had a gap in it, through which she could escape.

With swift feet she crossed the lawns, praying she might encounter no one. Oh, to be alone, alone!

Once through the privet hedge, the way was clearer. Prudence broke into a run. And then her foot caught in some trailing creepers, and with a little cry of pain she tripped and fell the new gown tearing at the hem, and one bare arm with a great scratch upon it.

This was the last straw. Prudence wept in utter self-abandonment.

Oh, castles-in-the-air, forever vanished! lovely dreams, that bitter waking had made null and void!

"Say there! Hold on! Who's there?"

Prudence started at the sound of a man's gruff voice, jerking herself upright, frightened. Was he a tramp? A robber?

No! He couldn't be! Tramps, anyhow, wouldn't be in evening clothes, would they? And this man wore his dress-suit so easily and gracefully that—miserly!—he must be one of 'them' . . .

"What's happened? Are you hurt I thought I heard some one cry out." He moved right up to her, then gave a startled exclamation. "Darned if it isn't the little girl I met down by the trout-pool!"

The trout-pool? Was this the man who had thrown Bert Traymore in the water? He had his back now to the moon, and so she couldn't see the outlines of his face.

He was! That voice, gruff and yet wonderfully attractive, with a kindly, honest ring about it . . . one couldn't hate the voice, although she disliked the man, big, burly giant that he was!

"I'm all right, I mean, I caught my foot in the creepers—" She turned her tear-blotted face away from the revealing moon, and tried to speak with ease, although something still caught in her throat, making speech difficult.

"Haven't sprained the foot, have you?" His voice was very kind and reassuring. "I used to be a Princeton player, and what I don't know about sprains and bruises isn't worth knowing."

"It—it doesn't hurt any more. I got a fright, that's all." She was hatefully conscious of the tears still on her cheeks, and with a quick, surreptitious movement, tried to wipe them off.

"Then that's all right. D'you know, I'm mighty glad I met you, little lady, because—" here he said perfectly amazing thing—because I've been busy fighting the blue devils, and I think heaven must have sent you along to me as 'second' . . .

"Second? What is that?"

"Oh, backer-up. The fellow who gives encouragement. Honestly, I'm glad I met you, and hope you won't run away immediately, because I need your company."

He needed her company? She who herself, had just been plunged into a bottomless pit of misery!

It was too strange, too utterly absurd!

She hesitated, then in a low voice she said:—

"I'm not too happy, myself. But if there's anything I can do—"

Ignoring the first part of her remark, he answered, gratefully.

"Why, if you'll stand by, for a bit and we can have a chat together, that would buck me up immensely."

Odd! Very odd!

Quite recently she had hated—or thought she did—but now, now, there was something in his air that touched her, something in the queer sound of his voice, as though a lump was there . . .

"You're Peter Armstrong, aren't you?" she asked, hesitatingly.

"Yes, that's my name. And you're Miss Prudence Page, right out of the pages of a story-book."

She gave a wan little smile that touched his heart. He'd seen the haunted misery of her eyes, the tear-stained cheeks, though he was too innately chivalrous to embarrass this poor child making any comment on that fact.

"I take it you've been at the ball up there?" He inclined his head towards the brightly-lit mansion.

"Yes, but I—I'm no good at social things." Her cheeks burned anew at the memory of that fiasco. "And so—"

"And so you slipped out for a breath of air?" he supplemented quickly. "Well, others' misfortune is my gain. You're here to help me chase away the blues, and I'm going to make the very most of the occasion, before some indignant partner comes and carries you away, See?"

Giving her no time to explain her lack of partner and her lack of "drawing power," he went on:—

"It isn't midnight, yet, and that pretty frock of yours is still a ball-gown, and not turned to rags, or I'd be tempted to think that you were Cinderella."

Prudence retorted, brokenly:—

"I am a Cinderella, if you only knew! And so I ran away from the ball—"

He laughed outright.

"And the ugly sisters were delighted, eh? You left them a clear field? There was definite meaning behind the light-spoken words."

"Well listen. I'm not vain enough to say that I'm Prince Charming—but I'm at your service, little Cinderella, and if I had a glass slipper in my pocket, believe me that I'd fit it on!"

HEALTH

A HEALTH SERVICE OF THE CANADIAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION AND LIFE INSURANCE COMPANIES IN CANADA.

"Please tell me what foods are acid" is a question that is frequently asked by our correspondents. Acidosis has come into prominence and, as is so often the case with new terms, it is not understood but is used indiscriminately to describe many complaints.

When foods are taken into the body, they are used, or, we might say, burned in the body. An ash is left, and if this ash is acid, then the food is an acid food. If the ash is alkaline, the food is classed as an alkaline food. Some foods leave an ash which is practically neutral.

From this, it is evident that we cannot classify foods by their tastes; as an example of this, oysters are an acid food and oranges an alkaline food. It is not necessary for us to know the reaction of each food because they fall into natural groups which are easy to remember.

Acid foods are meat, fish, fowl, oysters, eggs and cereals, the last named including cereal products, such as bread. Alkaline foods are fruits, except plums and cranberries; root and leafy vegetables and milk. Sugar and fats, such as butter and lard, are neutral foods.

For some unknown reason, many people fear what they call "acid foods." An excess of alkaline foods is just as undesirable as is an excess of acid foods. A diet limited to bread and meat is obviously undesirable in that it is too acid, but bread and meat in moderation, used together with fruits, vegetables and milk, provide a diet that is satisfactory because it is well-balanced. By a balanced diet, we imply that there is not an excess of one kind of food, and that all essentials are present in adequate amounts.

The practical application of this knowledge is that we can avoid acidosis by reasonable attention which will secure a balanced diet. This reasonable attention means that we eat a wide variety of foods, making sure that we include in our diet each day some fruit, leafy vegetables and milk. The person who has acidosis on such a diet is abnormal and requires medical care. There is no reason for the normal healthy person to fear acidosis or to pay attention to any of the faddy diets which are recommended as being necessary to prevent acidosis. Eat generous amounts of fruits, vegetables and milk, for in these foods is assurance of health protection.

MRS. ALEXANDER D. MACLEOD

There passed peacefully away at her home in Murray River, Aug. 9, 1933, Mrs. Alexander D. MacLeod in her 79th year.

Deceased had not been in robust health for some time, but the end came suddenly after an illness of only three days.

She was ever looking forward to that day when the Lord would take her home, and trusted securely in the sure promise of a risen Lord. There are left to cherish her memory besides a sorrowing husband, three daughters and five sons: Mrs. Isabelle Clow, Murray Harbor North; Mrs. A. A. MacSwain, Peters Road; Mrs. F. W. Johnston, Murray River; Murdock A. Melfort, Sask.; Charles of Aliston; Archibald, Malden, Mass.; Alexander J. Bowled Out Slavery (Canadian Press Cable) LONDON, Aug. 16—(The bowled out slavery," was the tribute paid to the famous liberator, William Wilberforce, today by A. Kidney, manager of the West Indies cricket team now touring England.

Kidney sent the following telegram to Lord Irwin, former Viceroy of India, who is chairman of a committee which is appealing for funds to erect a memorial to Wilberforce: "At the end of its test battles with England, the West Indies cricket team sends best wishes for success of the William Wilberforce Memorial appeal. Wilberforce's battle was won for both Great Britain and the colored people. He bowled out slavery."

Several members of the West Indies team are Negroes. The eleven is expected to finish its third and last test match with England early tomorrow morning.

OMITTED So you had a New England bowled dinner? They called it that, but I think they must have left out several of the states.

NOT USUALLY She—This is an ideal spot for a picnic. He—It must be. Fifty million insects can't be wrong.
