YESTERDAY was a most exceptionally fine day for the date. The sun shone clearly, and his warmth was perceptibly felt by those who were warmly clad. The market in the morning was crowded, the splendid display in and out of the building being such as to make one proud of the products of the "Garden of the Gulf." The Toronto World observes with apparent satisfaction that the Dunlop Fire & Rubber Goods Company, a concern which advertises extensively throughout Canada, has adopted Andrew Carnegie's simplified style of spelling. Several years ago the World shortened up the words "through" and "thorough," but it remained for the Dunlop Company to adopt the innovation in its most complete form. Those who read Dunlop advertisements will learn how bicycle and automobile tires are "attach" and "detach." Also how rubber heels are "fit" to the shoes. In an editorial dated Sept 21 the World says: "The Dunlop Fire & Rubber Goods Company have set a good example in the matter of reformed spelling by being the first firm in Canada, as far as known, to use the simplified spelling in their advertisements."

"From the World's point of view this is a departure in the right direction, and if the World is any judge of coming events in ten years from now this innovation will not be regarded as a novelty, but quite the usual thing."
