THE PROBLEM OF ARTIFICIAL FLIGHT.

Almost beyond question the problem of man's flight through the air is being solved by men now living. And in the days to come these men will rank in historic fame along with the great inventors and discoverers who were the pioneers in the subjugation and adaptation of steam and electricity. Mongolfier, Santos Dumont, the Wrights, Zeppelin, Graham Bell, will rank with Watts, Fulton, Brunel, Franklin, Morse, Edison and Marconi.

Already single flights have extended over a thousand miles. From twenty to forty men have been borne aloft, sailing among the clouds from twenty-four to thirty-six hours. The breadth of Germany has been traversed through the air, the English Channel and St. George's Channel have been crossed by men "upon their indefatigable wings." Wellman is preparing for his adventurous flight to the North Pole.

These are the beginnings; only the imagination can picture the full development. When Fulton made his first slow and intermittent voyage on she chose. With a start she came back to reality and the sound of his voice.

"You can understand that everybody is watching Miss Steuben with a great deal of interest. But there is no doubt in my mind that the Englishman will win out."

"What makes you think so?" Mildred asked.

"Because, that's a woman's reason, I know; but, as I say, it involves a good deal. The American, you see, has only his business prospects and for the present an average living. The Englishman has a fine old home, ancestry of the best, acres and tenants and a coronet about to descend upon his aristocratic head."

Mildred sighed and looked again at the girl in blue. She was very pretty as she stood with her back to a great mass of daffodils particularly, but now something about them set her heart to beating quickly with memories of home. A month later there would be a great showing of them in the little garden she and her mother tended. The dear, dear things! Nell had ordered them simply because they looked well against the wall paper of her drawing room, but to Mildred's girlish fancy they were vital, appealing. They meant home, the country, springtime—yes, and Tom, walking toward her, his face full of joy at sight of her.

Oh, this had no business to be here in this hot, crowded room, jostled by furs and velvets, simple, open air blossoms that they were! No one apparently was aware of them save herself and the girl in blue, who had drawn one from the jar and was pulling it to pieces.

A woman came across the room, set her cup down upon the table, smiled at Mildred and leaned toward Hills Hubbard.

"I have something to tell you which I just now heard on the best authority," she said. "You have lost your wager, my dear boy. Love wins. Miss Bertha Steuben marries the American after all."

"Is that possible?" he exclaimed. "I would not have believed it of her." "Nor I. Thank you, no more tea, my dear Miss Verrel. I am just leaving." She made her adieu and passed on gayly. Mildred's eyes, with a new expression in them, were again on the girl in blue.

He turned sharply. "You would do it yourself?" "Yes," Mildred said. "He studied her a moment. "Yes, I believe you would," he said, "but in your case there are no parallel circumstances. May I come tomorrow when you are alone, dear, and explain to you what I mean?"

Mildred turned white, but she faced him bravely.

"No," she gasped. "No. It would be of no use. You see, I have just made up my mind to go home tomorrow. It's the best place for me, I think, and they want me, father and my mother and— She stopped abruptly, with a vivid blush.

"Ah, I see!" Hills Hubbard said. He looked very straight before him for an instant.

In Mildred's ears were ringing the absurd old nursery rhyme with which Tom had teased her before she set forth to visit her cousin Nell: Daffy-Down-Dilly has gone up to town in her yellow petticoat and her green gown.

But Daffy-Down-Dilly was going home from town to be happy with her own.
