Political Situation Reviewed In Broadcast By W. Chester S. McLure

The following address was given recently by W. Chester S. McLure, M.P. for Queens, in a nation-wide broadcast over CBC at Ottawa:

"As a representative of Prince Edward Island, Garden Province of the Gulf of St. Lawrence, I am very glad indeed to take part in this series of talks being given through the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and CFCY by members of the new 20th Parliament of Canada.

"Now I am not a new member, but neither can I qualify as an old member. In 1930 I was elected to the House of Commons and served in the 17th Parliament for a term of five years. Last June the men and women of that constituency, which includes our provincial capital of Charlottetown, chose to return me to the Green Chamber at Ottawa.

"It occurred to me that it might interest you to hear something of the differences—and similarities—between the Canadian Parliament of those years, and that of today.

"At that time, Mr. Bennett—now Viscount Bennett—was our Prime Minister and Mr. King who today sits in the Prime Minister's chair, was Leader of the Opposition. The C.C.F. movement, now 28 strong in the House of Commons, was in its infancy and was headed by the late J. S. Woodsworth, former leader of the group.

"We had some members too, who were interested in money reform, but the Social Credit movement had not yet become organized as a political force.

Few Survivors

"Times change and parliaments change with them, and on my return to Ottawa early this month, I was also surprised, and also I must confess, a little disappointed at seeing so few members of a decade ago in the 20th Parliament of today.

"It was a very great pleasure for me to meet old friends in the Commons and Senate, members of the staff of the House and in many of the government departments.

"This parliamentary scene has undergone vast changes since the middle nineteen-thirties as governments must change when caught in the tidal wave of the greatest war in the world's history.

"Where we talked of hundreds of millions of dollars then, we talk of billions today. The personnel of our civil service has trebled—and more—and many new government departments have sprung up in our midst. With this great expansion of the public service and the immense sums required for war, taxes have climbed to heights undreamed of in any other period of this country's history.

"In the thirties, taxation of personal income, salaries, wages, profits on enterprise such as we know today would have been thought unsupportable. And indeed, I am told by some of my constituents and by some of other members' constituents, that they regard the tax burden as unsupportable today.

"The government—and necessarily no doubt in many cases, has invaded every nook and cranny of the business and even the private lives of the people of Canada. Just now after the victories over Nazi and Japanese aggression, are we beginning to shake ourselves loose from the self-imposed and cheerfully-endured shackles of government controls.

Many Veterans

"I was particularly pleased to meet among my colleagues of the new House of Commons, those who have served with notable distinction and courage in the war just ended. We have veterans serving with every main political group in this country, and what impresses me so greatly as far as they are concerned, is their common objective of building a better and a greater Canada.

"Speeches made in the House by our overseas men since September 6 have been marked by a happy absence of political partisanship, a broad appreciation of Canada's needs, and an ability to see the other fellow's point of view.

"This outlook—which I repeat is found on all sides and in every group of the Commons—augurs well for the success and the future accomplishments of government as a whole in this country.

"In the Senate, I am happy to note among the many new faces, that of Col. Brewer Robinson, who served with distinction in the war just ended, and in the world conflict of 1914-1918.

"A moment ago, I spoke of some of the changes in the scene at Canada's Capital. There have been many of them. And yet with all this intense government activity induced by the war, the Parliament of Canada itself, the form and methods of government and the needs of the people are essentially unchanged.

"Despite the tremendous strides made in manufacturing and the new and special skills acquired by Canadian labour, agriculture stands today as it has in the lives of past Parliaments as the most important and the dominating activity of this country.

Agriculture

"Not only has agriculture held this commanding place in the lives of the Canadian people during the five and a half years of war, but is emerging with even more vital significance in this post-war period.

"Napoleon is quoted as having said 'An Army moves on its stomach'. The same principle applies today.

"The Canadian farmer and fisherman from Prince Edward Island on the East to the Pacific coastal belt has kept our own Armed Services and those of some of our Allies supplied with the food that made them healthy and well-nourished during their gruelling overseas years.

"Today the produce of these same Canadian farms which served this country so ably in times of war, are making their contribution to world peace. The food we are growing in our fields, raising on our pastures and taking from our coastal waters for the needy populations of Britain and Europe, is playing and will play a great part in the prevention of riots, bloodshed and revolution in the war-torn lands.

Parliamentary Practice

"It is a source of satisfaction to me—as I'm sure it is to other members—to come from my home in the East to this splendid building in Ottawa, where the forms of procedure, the ceremonies and the courtesies observed are those of our forefathers, and stem back to the centuries-old practices and customs of the Mother of Parliaments at Westminster.

"I am not a believer in mere ceremonial. But the very customs of Parliament are in themselves symbols of freedom won by men of independent thought over the generations, and speak of the solidarity of our Canadian democracy.

"There are critics of our form of government in this country. There are people who say that Parliament is wasteful of time and money—and that it is inefficient. And no doubt there is a grain of truth in much of this criticism. But government is a science in itself, and cannot be carried on as a private business can be.

"Our system of parliamentary checks and balances—the party system with a government and an Opposition each serving His Majesty in its own way—has preserved the liberty of our people more effectively than any other form of government in recent centuries. Slow it may be, and at times undoubtedly is, but in general parliament has worked with justice, with fairness, and in the end with efficiency.

The Throne Speech

"As those of you who follow the political news are aware, Parliament for the past three weeks has been engaged on the debate on the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne. The Speech from the Throne itself as read by the Governor General at the opening of Parliament is a statement of broad government policy. In the debate that follows, the subject matter of the Speech is criticized by the Opposition and by Opposition groups, and is supported by members sitting on the government side.

"Since the debate strikes the key-note of the session, it is generally a long one, and the Speaker of the House allows the greatest latitude on subject matter. You can speak on almost any topic under the sun, and many members use at least a part of their allotted 40 minutes describing the glories of their own ridings. Others who are recognized specialists on certain subjects, speak on their own specialty, and praise or blame the government according to their party affiliation.

"In the course of these past three weeks, members from all parts of our country have spoken ably and well, and both from my previous term in the House of Commons and from reports of the years between, I feel that parliament to date has made a splendid beginning. It is difficult to recall any previous parliament in which so many sound, constructive and truly progressive suggestions were submitted by speakers on all sides of the Chamber.

"Now Parliament has its humorous incidents as well as its serious business. One of our members gave a lecture on peaches some two weeks ago, illustrating his point with baskets and boxes of fruit which he placed on his desk. Another gentleman brought a design of a new Canadian flag, and with the assistance of an attendant, proudly displayed it as a new national banner.

Speaker's Ruling

"These two incidents proved too much even for the lenience of our new Speaker, Dr. Gaspard Fauteux of Montreal. So, Dr. Fauteux solemnly ruled that members must not bring exhibits, displays, or merchandise into the Chamber to illustrate points made in their speeches.

"Personally I was almost sorry to hear the Honourable Speaker make this ruling although I admit the justice of his contention that it does not add to the dignity of the House. At the same time, it prevents me from displaying on my desk there, examples of our magnificent Prince Edward Island potatoes, pelts of our incomparable black foxes from our fox farms, or some of the succulent oysters found off the Prince Edward Island coast.

"I know that no member of Parliament from any of the Maritime Provinces is supposed to speak either on the public platform or over the air without making at least some reference to Maritime rights. Indeed I've been joked about this really vital subject on more than one occasion by my colleagues from some of the other Provinces.

"But reducing the complex matter of Maritime Rights to its simplest form, our contention is simply this: That the other Provinces and the Federal government in particular adhere fully and loyally to the terms of Confederation;

"The Maritime Provinces are seeking neither special privilege nor hand-outs. We have the resources, and above all we have the type of man needed to develop those resources. We ask only the friendly and understanding co-operation of the rest of this country to develop these resources as they should—and as I am convinced they will be developed.

P. E. I. Problems

"As to my own Province, might I remind my listeners that Prince Edward Island—and indeed the historic double constituency which I have the honour to represent together with my colleague on the other side of the House, Mr. J. L. Douglas—is the very fountain-head of our Confederation.

"Those familiar with Canadian history will recall that it was at Charlottetown under the leadership of Sir John A. Macdonald, where those resolutions leading to the union of the Provinces of British North America were first discussed and approved.

"We are very proud of our Island, nestling in the clear green seas of the Gulf. We are still more proud of the men and women whose hard work, progressive spirit and initiative have made it an island gem of this continent.

"Both in the war from which our fighting-men are still returning and in the war of 1914-1918, Prince Edward Island has been second to none in the proportion of enlistments for active service.

"Many of them have paid with their lives for the freedom which we at home are enjoying today. Many more have returned to us wounded, maimed, disabled or broken in health.

"I trust—and I am sure that my feeling on this matter is echoed in the heart of every man, woman and child of our province—that the Government of Canada will see to it that these men who have given their strength and health for their country, will at least be given the medical treatment which is theirs by right, and will be nursed back to health in a hospital or hospitals located in their native Province.

"It is true that we are Canadians, but we are also Prince Edward Islanders. And it is not until the war veteran crosses Northumberland Strait on his return from Europe that he really feels in the words of Sir Walter Scott:

"This is my own, my native land."

Chemistry helps to make things Better!

CONSIDER some of the improvements that have come to us through chemistry in recent years.

Our automobiles have run on tires that lasted longer because of rubber chemicals. They have been given new and longer-lasting beauty with better finishes, such as "Duco" and "Dulux". Gears have been case hardened by means of chemicals; and moulded plastic parts have been used for new, attractive interior trim.

Chemistry has given us nylon yarn, too; vastly better paints, varnishes and lacquers for our homes; and light, tough, transparent "Lucite". Chemical research has found a way to make textiles water repellent. The list goes on and on.

Most assuring of all, is the fact that our chemists are still at work seeking ways to make old products better and to discover new products that will contribute to the welfare and comfort of Canadians in the years to come. Chemistry never stands still.

By improving things... Chemistry brings Better Living
