Address and Presentation

On Friday night, March 16th, a number of friends gathered at the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Jay, to honor Miss Celia Kelly, ere her departure from Morell where she has spent almost two years as an employee of Dingwell and Rossiter, General Mechants.

While living in Morell, Miss Kelly has accumulated quite a number of friends.

After a few minutes of laughter and song, a very interesting address was read by Miss Lillian Ropson, and a well-filled purse presented by Miss Mildred Jay.

Celia then took the opportunity to express her hearty thanks for their kind remembrance and expressions of good will, after which they all joined in singing "For She's a Jolly Good Fellow."

A very delicious lunch was then served by Mildred Jay and Lillian Ropson. Remainder of evening spent in friendly chats and music.

Miss Kelly expects to leave for St. John shortly to take over a new position.

Address—

Miss Celia Kelly, Morell

Dear Celia,

It was with regret that we, your friends, heard the whisper that passed around from one to another, that you were soon to leave us for an unfamiliar yet more luring land.

We hope that your sojourn with us has been a pleasant one. Undoubtedly there have been many times when you have had to take "the bitter with the sweet" but we can only hope that the sweet will counteract the bitter.

We have indeed enjoyed your friendship and it is the sincere wish of each one of us that you will never fail to visit us in the future.

Let this be an "Au-Revoir"—not "good bye".

Our remembrance, that we ask you to accept, is very small, but it conveys the best of good luck, our sincere good wishes and our choicest blessings for the best of everything in the future.

Adieu! God Bless You

ALSO THE HILLS

by

Frances Parkinson Keyes

We won't ask them to rise and take bows, one by one. This isn't a banquet or a rally or the like of that. It's just a friendly Sunday night supper on a national holiday that seems different to us than any Fourth of July we ever celebrated before. But I will ask the rest of the old-timers to join with Mother and me in giving these newcomers a hand, to show them how glad we are to have them here in our hometown and on Farman Hill."

The applause was immediate and vociferous. Its beneficiaries responded to it variously, some rather bashfully and blushingly, others with unconcealed gratification. The clapping continued so long that Daniel was obliged to raise his hand again, in order to command silence to go on.

"I began by saying that we'd seen changes on Farman Hill since the last friendly gathering we had here. I don't need to tell you the first of these changes was wrought by death, and that it was the sort of death that's pretty hard to speak of, even after time's got in its work of healing. But I'm going to speak to you about the the death of my daughter, Jenness today, though I've never done it before and don't know's I'll ever shall do it again. I'm going to speak of it for a special reason. I've a notion some of you may have been saying among yourselves. "If Jenness Farman hadn't gone to Washington and taken the kind of job she did, she would be alive today.' She might, friends, she might. But then again there's nothing certain about it We've got to be careful where we put the blame, even when we're bowed down by grief.

Hope

Mother and I always tried to give our children a good Christian home and a good Christian example. But maybe we didn't succeed as well as we might have, or maybe Jenness herself didn't try to follow our teachings as carefully as she could have. Anyway we're not going to let the loss of our daughter keep us from looking toward Washington with hopefulness and trust. I've got faith to believe we're going to win this war too, and to think that 20 years from now we'll look back and say, 'Well our leaders in World War No Two had faults and made their mistakes but just the same they did take us on to victory."

"I don't need to say quite so much about the loss of my son, Jerome," Daniel continued, "as I did about the death of my daughter, Jenness. It isn't so hard in that case to look past the loss to the lesson. Not that it wasn't a bitter blow to my wife and me when we heard he'd been taken from us, and how. Our only son, and a son we were proud of through and through, like we had every reason to be. I guess there isn't anything to make up to grieving parents for the loss of their only son, and mother and I aren't the only ones in this group who know that either."

Daniel looked towards Mrs. Haskins, who was surreptitiously wiping her eyes on the corner of her best handkerchief: Chet, her only son, who had joined the Marines had gone from New River to Guadalcanal, and she had received a telegram like the one which had come for Alix. Nor was the community loss limited to only sons: the Wests had lost one of theirs in the raid over Tokyo, the Carletons one of theirs in the Aleutians. The Merrill twins who were so devoted to each other and had succeeded in staying together, as far as anyone knew, had both been missing for months. But Daniel realized he must not speak of all this. There were other things to say and he must get on with them.

"Whenever we go to the graveyard and see the memorial that's been raised to our son, mother and I say to each other, 'This is the first time a Farman hasn't been buried at the point.' We can't help it. We can't help thinking that he's lying in a lonely grave somewhere in India. Instead of right here, among his own folks. But then we cheer each other up. We tell each other that the other part of the Farman tradition still holds, that there's been another boy born on the Hill."

CHAPTER 66

Daniel looked around to see Alix standing close to him with Jerry in her arms. He took the baby from her and held him on high for everyone to see.'

"The Farmans are going on." he said solemnly. "That's one respect in which there hasn't been any change on the Hill and there won't be. Jenness is dead and Jerome's dead, but Jerome's son is alive, and he'll go forward, where I have to leave off.

"That isn't all either. My other daughter's been spared, my daughter Judith. She's here with us today, she and her husband whom you've helped me to welcome. She's had considerable to tell her mother and me about her experiences as a nurse over in Africa, and maybe it'll be so she can tell some of these stories to you too. I hope so, because they're real interesting, all of them. But the one I like the best about the speech the commanding officer made to the unit she was in, the night before, they disembarked for Oran. He gave them their instructions about their equipment and all such and then he said, "Keep saying this to yourselves tomorrow. "I am doing this for the folks at home. It is something they could not do for themselves but that I could do for them and that I must do for them." They did keep saying this to themselves as they went under fire. Some of them for the first time. But every one of them who heard that man kept saying it."

Pride and Love

Daniel looked over at Judith and the men and women who had been listening to him with increasing intentness followed his glance. She was sitting with her shining head bent, the soft hair drawn down on either side of her brow and over her ears, so that the scars on her face did not show much, and her slight, transparent hands were folded in her lap.

The African Campaign ribbon was pinned on the dress made with the long sleeves and the carefully cut neckline. She flushed a little when she realized every one was looking at her, but then she herself looked at Joe and saw that there was pride as well as love in his eyes and this steadied her.

"That speech put something in my head." Daniel went on. "It gave me an idea for a slogan we could have ourselves, right here in Farman. I've said to most of you before that the time was past when we could say the world had kind of gone by us here and that we were real glad of it. I've said we'd got to wake up and realize we were part of a world story after all. Yes, and we're part of a world struggle—at least the struggle of that share of the world that wants to see right prevail over might."

Our Duty

So I think we better say to ourselves everyday when we go out into our barns and our kitchens and our gardens and our fields, 'I am doing this for the men and the girls overseas. It is something that they could not do for themselves but that I could do for them, and must do for them. I can keep a herd, and hens and hogs. I can make butter and cheese. I can preserve fruits and vegetables. I can feed my family so they won't have to use food that's needed for some other famly that can't feed itself, and I can help to feed other families too. This is my work. It's war work, just as much as if I were in a fox hole or on a bomber or under fire. I can work a little harder or a little longer than I ever have before.'

'I won't say, 'Well, I've always workcd from 4 in the morning till 9 or 10 at night, right through the times other man have been bellyaching about overtime after an eight-hour day, and howling for more pay.' It won't help any to say that because some other men won't carry their share of the load, I won't carry mine either. The only thing that will help will be for me to carry all I can as long as their's a call for it. Maybe those other men don't feel about their country the way I do. But whether they do or not I've got to keep faith with myself. I've got to fight to the last ditch to make the Farman Hill of the future worthy of the Farman Hill of the past, so that when my son gets ready to carry on after me he won't be ashamed of what I've done or afraid the heritage his father died to save will be taken from him by the enemies of freedom and the powers of darkness."

There was a deep silence when Daniel finished. Serena looked up at her husband and his own glance traveled slowly from Judith and Joe to Alix and Dexter and finally rested on Jerry. Then he gave the signal. Together Serena and the Lippmans began to play and everyone joined in the singing:

"My country 'tis of thee,
Sweet land of liberty,
Of thee I sing;
Land where my fathers died,
Land of the pilgrim's pride,
From every mountain side
Let freedom ring.

CAPT. MARK H. BONNELL

The death occurred at his home in Murray River early yesterday morning, after two weeks illness of Capt. Mark H. Bonnell, at the age of 85 years.

Born in Newfoundland, the late Capt. Bonnell came to this province with his parents, who settled in Murray River, and when only eleven years of age started his seafaring career. His father was a deep-sea captain.

The late Captain Bonnell made numerous voyages from Island ports to St. Pierre, Newfoundland and other ports with produce cargoes, and was known to be honest and upright in all his dealings. During the course of the First Great War his ship was constantly in demand. He retired about twenty-three years ago.

He leaves to mourn his passing a son, Harry, with Frank B. Clark, produce dealer, and a daughter Mary (Mrs. J. Liby), Portland, Me. His wife (Margaret McDonald, Little Sands) predeceased him about sixteen years ago. About ten years ago he married Sadie MacAusland, who survives. He also leaves eight grand-children, four of whom are in the service.

He took a keen and an active interest in politics and was elected as a Liberal Councillor for 4th Kings in a by-election held on August 30, 1922. The by-election was caused by the death of the former representative, William G. Sutherland. Capt. Bonnell was nominated again for the general election of 1923 but was defeated when the Conservatives swept the province, electing 26 members to the Liberals four.
