

Here's the No-Work Way to Wax Floors Without Rubbing

Just Like Pouring Shine on the Floor

Thanks to a recent scientific discovery you can now keep your floors gleaming like new without wearing yourself out. It's the new-day no-work way to wax your floors—both wood and linoleum. All you do is get a tin of the new Old English no-rubbing Floor Polish from any store and pour a little of it right on your floor—spread it lightly and evenly.

That's all. While you sit in your favorite rocker it dries to a wonderful, smooth shine in just a few minutes. Your floor looks lovely—like new—and it will look that way for an amazingly long time.

Now keep your floors nice looking and gleaming without rubbing—this new, easy way.

VIXENS NEED "IMPERIALS"

Successful fox ranchers feed IMPERIAL FOX BISCUITS because they contain food elements essential for health, strength and successful propagation.

"IMPERIALS" should be fed liberally now to vixens because they supply elements necessary to ensure large litters of strong pups and maintain health and vigor of vixens.

"IMPERIALS" fed during this season repay richly in generous results.

BEN-HUR MAKES LEGAL STATEMENT

By GENERAL LEW WALLACE

CHAPTER X.

At sight of the procession from the east, the thousands from the city halted and waved their palm branches, chanting:

"Blessed is the King of Israel that cometh in the name of the Lord!"

And all the thousands who were of the rider's company, both near and far, replied so that the air shook with the sound and the cries of the lepers were not heard.

The moment of the meeting of the hosts was come and with it the opportunity the sufferers were seeking: if not taken, it would be lost forever.

The mother struggled to get nearer, but Tirrah fell too faint to follow. Some one in the crowd saw them and shouted:

"The lepers! Stone them!"

"The accursed of God! Kill them!"

Some, however, near-by, familiar with the nature of the man by whom the unfortunates were appealing, were silent while He rode up and stopped in front of the woman. She beheld His face—calm, pitiful and of exceeding beauty, the large eyes tender with benignant purpose.

"O Master," the mother cried. "Thou canst make us clean! Have mercy upon us."

"Believest thou I am able to do this?" He asked.

"Thou art He of Whom the prophets spake—Thou art the Messiah," she answered.

His eyes grew radiant, His manner confident.

"Woman," He said, "great is thy faith; be it even unto thee as thou wilt."

He lingered an instant after, apparently unconscious of the throng, then rode on, as the grateful woman cried:

"To God in the highest, glory! Daughter, look up! We are saved!"

And Ben-Hur, among the multitude, recognized Amrah and witnessed the cure of his mother and sister.

CHAPTER XI.

Ben-Hur pitched two tents on the Upper Cedron east a short space from the Tombs of the Kings, and furnished them for his mother and sister. There they were to remain until their cleansing could be certified by a priest, and they could return to the city.

Meantime the country about filled with temporary shelters for the pilgrims to the Passover. Among them were low-set brawny men, bare-headed and black-bearded, some of whom conferred secretly with Ben-Hur in his tent. To his mother's question as to who they were, he answered:

"Some good friends of mine from Galilee."

Through them he kept in touch with the schemes of the Nazarene's enemies.

Now Balthasar had a daughter, Iras, and going into Jerusalem, one night to see her father, Ben-Hur met her at the khan at which they were staying. Iras scoffed at the faith which Ben-Hur had in the Nazarene.

"Tell me," she said, "where is the son of the carpenter? Has he broken Rome to pieces? I saw your dreaming 'Caesar' enter Jerusalem. I looked for a figure with a promise of royalty—a horseman in purple. Instead of a Caesar helmeted and sworded, I saw a man with a woman's face riding on an ass's colt, and in tears! The King! The Son of God!"

In spite of himself, Ben-Hur winced.

"Daughter of Balthasar," he said, "that you have a purpose, I am sure. To it and I will answer you. Then let us go our several ways and forget we ever met."

"You have my leave—go!" she said coldly, but as he turned away, she told him that she knew of his legions trained in Galilee to fight the Romans.

"With this knowledge," he went on, "I was happy as a woman can be who has at her disposal the fortune or life of a man whom—she stopped and looked away—"whom she is at a loss what to do with."

"Tomorrow you will determine what to do with me," he replied. "I may die."

Then she told him that she loved Messala and urged him to restore some of the fortune the Roman had lost on the chariot race. Messala, she said, was a hopeless cripple as a result of the overturning of his chariot.

"I say that to the six talents he lost, you must add twenty," she declared, threatening that unless he did so she would tell the Romans of the plot.

But Ben-Hur told her that the inheritance he had had from Arris was sold and that the money was out of reach—in the hands of Simonides—who had the protection of the emperor.

Thus defying her, he left.

CHAPTER XII.

But Iras had seen what Ben-Hur had failed to see—that it was not an earthly kingdom that the Nazarene purposed to build, and the rebellion which aimed to put him on the throne of Judea never started.

One morning, soon after two Galileans came to Ben-Hur's tent with the news that the Saviour was to die—that "the tree of the cross is already at Golgotha."

"It is a great idea," he said. "I

Woman Tells Under Oath How Fruit-a-tives Rid Her of Sick-Headaches And Stomach Trouble

Mrs. Ethel Duff, 135 Wellington St. E., Chatham, Ontario, tells in a sworn statement how she got relief from stomach trouble and sick-headaches. Mrs. Duff told her experience under oath before a notary. She says,—"I was chronically bothered with stomach trouble which brought on sick headaches six days out of seven. Nothing I did or took to relieve them did any good. Then I read about Fruit-a-tives and started taking them. In less than a month my stomach trouble had gone and I had no more headaches. I gave Fruit-a-tives to my husband who also had stomach trouble. They helped him an awful lot."

That Fruit-a-tives have helped bring new health to thousands of men and women is evidenced by the fact that, today, it is the largest selling remedy of its kind in Canada. If you are bothered with constipation, indigestion or kindred ills start Fruit-a-tives right now.

Copy of Mrs. Duff's sworn statement will be sent on request. Write Fruitatives Limited, Ottawa, Canada.

FRUIT-A-TIVES—25c and 50c EVERYWHERE

Ben-Hur stared at them.

"The cross!" he exclaimed.

"They took Him last night and tried Him," one of them went on.

"Twice Pilate denied His guilt, but at last he washed his hands, and said 'Be it upon you, then, and they answered—"

"Who answered?"

"The chief priests and people—'His blood be upon us and our children.'"

"Holy Father Abraham!" cried Ben-Hur; "a Roman kinder to an Israelite than his own kin! And if indeed He should be the Son of God, what shall ever wash Him from their children? It must not be! It is time to fight! I shall go to collect the legions."

"Alas!" cried one Galilean. "Master, I and my friend are the only ones faithful. The rest follow the priests."

"Seeking what?" asked Ben-Hur.

"To kill him."

"Not the Nazarene?"

"Yes."

"Let us go to Golgotha," cried Ben-Hur.

The three rode through crowds of people and on the way joined Simonides and Esther, with whom they stopped at Balthasar's khan.

Soon on the street appeared an army of boys, hooting and screaming:

"The King of the Jews! Room for the King of the Jews!"

A band of legionaries followed, marching in sturdy indifference.

Then came the Nazarene! He was nearly dead. Every few feet he staggered as if he would fall. An inscription on a board was tied to His neck. A crown of thorns had been crushed hard down upon His head, making cruel wounds. Four soldiers guarded Him, but some—members of the mob broke through the guard and struck Him with sticks.

Yet no sound escaped Him, neither remonstrance nor groan. As he passed the khan, He turned his look in memory through life.

They could see He was thinking of them, not Himself, and the dying eyes gave them the blessing He was not permitted to speak.

CHAPTER XIII.

Upon the slopes of Calvary, stood a great throng, indifferent to the two thieves who were to be executed, caring only for the Nazarene, and for Him only as He was an object of hate or fear or curiosity.

He who loved them all and was about to die for them.

The high-priest stood near by. "Bld the men make haste," he said to the centurion in command.

"These must be dead by sun down, and buried that the land may not be defiled. Such is the law."

"The crosses are ready," said the centurion.

"Let the blasphemer go first. The Son of God may be able to save himself."

About five years after the crucifixion, Esther, the beautiful villa by Misenum. Ben-Hur came to tell her that the Emperor Nero had begun the persecutions of Christians in Rome and that at the same time he received news that the Sheik Iderim had left him his fortune.

Simonides entered.

"Son of Hur," he said, "the Lord has been good to you. Is it not time to decide finally the meaning of the great gift?"

"I decided that long ago," Ben-Hur answered. "The fortune was meant for the service of the City."

"Alas! with the news of this gift comes news of the persecutions," Simonides said. "The Romans hold two things sacred, the ashes of the dead and all places of burial. If you cannot build temples for the worship of the Lord above ground, then build them below ground—carry to them the bodies of all who die in the faith."

Ben-Hur rose excited.

"It is a great idea," he said. "I will sail for Rome tomorrow!"

Esther put her hand on his arm. "S'it with thou best serve the Christ," she said. "Let me go with you and help."

If any of my readers, visiting Rome, will make the short journey to the catacomb of San Calisto, he will see what became of the fortune of Ben-Hur. Out of that vast tomb Christianity issued to supersede the Caesars.

FOLKA DOTS

Folka dots are having the usual spurt of interest expected at this time of the year. The tendency this season seems to be to the larger and bolder effects. This may be explained by the fact that they appear on more formal backgrounds such as marquisettes, crinkled organdies and voiles. Usually the motifs are ringed in a contrasting color to give them added character.

This scheme is always a favorite in sportswear cottons and this year is no exception. Folka dots in addition to being bigger and gayer. Usually they appear in combinations of three harmonizing or sharply contrasting colors such as green with yellow and red on black or navy. There is less emphasis on the sea-side dot although the demand remains well sustained for them especially in connection with the cravat print idea.

Have Your Eyes Re-Examined Regularly

Your two-year-old reading glasses are now no longer suitable. They don't help ENOUGH. Your eyes are not now in the condition they were in two years ago. If you recognize that fact you will have a re-examination and secure the help which their PRESENT condition demands. Neglect of this matter is very unwise.
