Manitoba Woman Thanks Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Crandall, Manitoba.—"When I was a young girl at home and working I had terrible pains, almost more than I could bear, and I was not regular. These troubles kept me so tired all the time that I had no strength and no ambition to join in with my friends and have a good time. I was just tired and miserable always and life just seemed as if it wasn't worth living. I saw so much in the papers about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and then I had a friend who had taken it and told me about it, so I got some. Every month after taking it I got stronger and I soon did not suffer every month. It stopped the pains and helped me in other ways. Then when my babies were coming I was tired and worn out the first three months and ached badly. I took the Vegetable Compound right along and must say it made a new woman of me and able to do my work, and it helped me through confinement. You see I am a farmer's wife with a big house to look after, and three babies now. I have told ever so many women about your medicine. Just last week I got a letter from my old chum in the East. Her baby was born fifteen days before mine and she told me she was feeling very well, her back aches so much, and that she is going to take the same medicine I took. You can use my letter and I hope some one will be helped by it."—Mrs. J. O. H. Kidd, Box 56, Crandall, Manitoba. C

In the Pay of "The Unknown"

It was Fanny requested by Sergeant Anson to stay on at the Court (or a few days) who spoke of it to her mother the first time Dagon appeared, on an invented errand, at the door of the housekeeper's room, "Good gracious!" the girl exclaimed as he announced himself. "You gave me such a start! I almost thought you were Miss Haste disguised as a boy, a man, Did you ever see such a resemblance, mother?"

Mrs. Gillett was chalk pale, but perhaps no paler than when Dagon had interviewed her on the morning of his arrival. He had thought then that she looked like a dead woman galvanized into seeming life. Yet she had, at the time, said nothing about a resemblance, nor had her daughter. The detective was not surprised, however, at the omission on the first occasion, when he came first to Hidden Hall Court his upper lip had been adorned by a small mustache and he wore his dark hair brushed back from his forehead in the approved style of British youth. His aim had been to look as much of a man and as conventional as possible. But since he had seen Pandora Haste's photograph, he had been doing all he could to accentuate and call attention to the likeness. In London he had shaved off the dark shadow which did duty as a mustache and he now had his naturally wavy hair parted in the middle, a fashion which made him look younger, more boyish—almost girlish. To add to this effect, he had on a blue serge suit with a silk shirt and soft rolling collar turned over a tie done in a sailor knot.

No one who had ever known Pandora Haste at all well could mistake the resemblance now, or say vaguely, "Who is it you are like?" "I've hardly seen Miss Haste." Mrs. Gillett stammered. "It was only—that awful night when she scolded me—oh, quite rightly!—because I couldn't keep calm, I had other things to think of than her face then, I assure you, Fanny. Still—now you recall her—I remember her large eyes—her short hair. Yes, I suppose there is a resemblance. But, of course, there is nothing strange in it. We see striking resemblances every day. You are an American, are you not, Mr. Dagon?"

"To tell the truth, Mrs. Gillett, I don't know what I am," the young man answered, resting his elbows on the table and, with his face between his hands, looking across at her. "They were all three in the housekeeper's sitting room, Mrs. Gillett darning some beautiful old linen, and Fanny with a book of love poems in her lap. Dagon had consciously thrown out all his power of magnetism to win them both, and felt that he had captured their somewhat reluctant interest. "Like Miss Haste (the captain told me her story), I'm a foundling. So there's another likeness between us. One of the first things I remember is wandering about a street alone, crying because I was hungry and deserted—a very small kid three or four years old. It seems that it was a street in the Canadian town of Halifax, and that I could speak only Italian."

As he told Dagon kept his big eyes on Mrs. Gillett's face. She was looking at him when he began, and after a quick dilation of her pupils the lids dropped. She turned away from him, and he saw her face work. But she was not working. Dagon noticed that her hands trembled.

"I had a funny little red waistcoat on, which I have kept to this day," the detective added. "And the queer part about that is, I dream I have sometimes, I see myself with a beautiful woman in a garden which must be Italian, and she is carrying a baby in a red cloak. I often wonder if the dream is a remembrance of something real."

Mrs. Gillett dropped her thimble, which rolled across the floor. Mechanically Dagon sprang to pick it up. Fanny got to her feet also, and the detective allowed the young woman to reach the thimble before him. She gave it back to Mrs. Gillett and Dagon saw that she looked at her mother in surprise.

He felt a strong sense of elation. He had meant to make this test, but had hoped little from it. Remarkable, even mysterious as Mrs. Gillett seemed in the situation of housekeeper, he had not expected her to know anything of Pandora Haste's past—his own past, surely linked with that of the girl. Yet his stray arrow had hit the bull's eye. This woman did know something—everything perhaps! She was alarmed or conscience-stricken, well-nigh overwhelmed.

The detective realized that at this moment he had her at his mercy. If he chose to spring his discovery upon the woman she might be frightened into telling some part of what she knew! But he would not be satisfied with part. He wanted all. So he must wait.

Now, if she chose to hold back important information he could not prove that she had it. Armed with what he guessed, he must learn more to gain a hold upon her. As for Fanny, the look of surprise he had caught made him think that she did not know the secret of her mother's alarm. She wondered what it meant, and was dying for him—Dagon—to go, so that she

Sleeping Beauty

The prince ordered his favorite horse to be saddled. Then he changed into his hunting suit, called his followers together with a blast of his horn, and off they set on their hunting trip.

A BRAVE PRINCE

"It's a deserted palace," replied one of his men. "No one knows any thing about it, but it's supposed to be haunted by witches. There's a thick hedge around it that no one could possibly get through."

"That's exciting!" cried the daring prince. "I should like to explore it."

(Here the suit the prince was wearing about the court before he changed to his hunting suit, which you'll see tomorrow. Color it green, with a golden belt. Sit his hat on the dotted line.)

BERLIN, Feb. 23.—The new Prussian cabinet headed by Dr. Wilhelm Marx, met with defeat in the Diet yesterday and resigned.

The cabinet was unable to withstand the opposition of the Nationalists, Fascists, People's party and Communists, and on a vote of confidence, was defeated 221 to 218.

At a recent meeting of the Ladies Branch L. O. B. A., a resolution was unanimously passed, placing the organ purchased by them some time ago, at the disposal of the public. This is a commendable move as the lack of a musical instrument in the hall has always been a handicap in preparations for our public entertainments.

A Bazaar and Valentine Tea was held in the hall here on the 14th and proved a decided success. The tables and booths were prettily decorated with a fish pond proved an attraction for those not particularly interested in the many beautiful handmade articles for sale. Some $70.00 was realized which goes to the credit of the Women's Institute under whose auspices the very successful affair was arranged.

Mr. Alfred Fyfe and son, Stanley Bridge, were visitors here on Monday.

The Women's Missionary Society of the Presbyterian Church has recently forwarded to the Presbyterian Treas., the sum of $26.00 to be added to the fund for the building of the new Girls' High School in Ham Heung, Korea. This was a free will offering entirely apart from the regular missionary giving.

The slaughter sales put on by Messrs. P. J. Noy & Co., attracted a large number of buyers eager to take advantage of the very reduced prices.
