EVENSONG

By Pte. (Rev.) George Turpin

The battalion is at the base camp, resting after a long spell in the trenches, and as the evening draws on there comes stealing over the camp a feeling of rest and contentment. The comparative safety on the base camp soothes and relaxes the highly strung nerves of the returned soldiers, and this feeling of rest and contentment most readily finds expression in music and song.

Softly and tenderly there sounds from the band tent that appealing melody to which the words of the hymn, "The day Thou gavest, Lord, is ended," are set. The buzz of conversation in the tents is hushed, the men engaged in fatigue duties pause at the task as the melody strikes their ears, and they listen, with an expression on their faces that speaks of worship and revived memories, until the last harmonious notes sink away. For a moment or so there is silence in the camp, of itself more expressive than a grand "Amen" sung by a great choir, and telling of deep thought and devotion. Then in one of the tents someone starts to sing that favorite "darkie" song:

"In the evening by the moonlight you can hear those darkies singing,
In the evening by the moonlight you can hear those banjoes ringing;
How the old folks would enjoy it; they would sit all night and listen,
As we sung in the evening by the moonlight.'

Soon a dozen or more voices will blend in harmony as they sing this beautiful old-folk song which takes one's thought back to the old homestead the family gathering, nights on the trail, and camp fire happiness. Time after time the song is repeated, because of its associations and clinging memories.

Then they pass from this to some livelier song.

"Pack up your troubles in your old kit bag,

are the words that echo and re-echo through the lines, and then, as if in obedience to this song's command, there are some lively songs, interspersed with jokes and happy laughter, sounding through the camp.

From gay to grave, and grave to gay the songs change and rechange, and now, as a solo, a verse of the ballad, "Mother Machree," is sung by some soldier. The camp listens silently to the verse, and then manly voices join in the chorus with much feeling in their tones that speaks of a heart that goes out to a loved one and a mind that has memories of a mother's love and influence.

"Sure I love the dear silver that shines in your hair,
And the brow that's all furrowed and wrinkled with care;
I kiss the dear fingers so toil-worn for me,
Oh! God bless you and keep you. Mother Machree."

This chorus sounds like some sacred anthem when sung in rest camp by men returned from face to face with danger and death, and one can realize how large a place "mother" fills in their hearts as he hears this song in the evening.

"Evensong" in a rest camp behind the firing line is a revelation of the emotions hidden in the heart of men, and one knows that after "Last Post" and "Lights Out" have sounded these men are laying their heads upon improvised pillows with a peaceful feeling of rest. They have unburdened their hearts and thoughts in song and music; they have sung of home, friends, sweethearts and parents; they have worshipped God in beautiful hymns and by silent devotion. The echo of these men's hearts, and their longings, are felt, more that heard, in this eevnsong.

Canada's future songs are being conceived in these evenings in camp, for we know that before a nation can have real hymns she must have an echo of human suffering, of exile, and the pathos of extreme self-sacrifice, as well as the joys of victory, in their composition. Her sons are on a foreign soil fighting the enemy, in a sense exiled, sacrificing themselves, and thus they are being trained to feel and understand acutely what song and music is to the human heart. Our future music and song will be the echo of these songs in the evening on the battle-fields of Europe, true to life, appealing to the heart, and interpreting aright the emotions of men.

Rest camp evensong is a whisper of peace by the voice of God to a nation in arms, reminding them of, and keeping alive that love of home and friends and the peacefullness they have left, and inspiring them to carry on with courageous cheerfulness.

THE HORSE'S PRAYER

In a country church on a winter night
There was warmth and cheer, and a brilliant light
Shone from the chandeliers in ruddy glow
On the faces bright of the crowd below,

All were warmly clad in their winter's dress,
With a carpet soft for their feet to press.
When the pastor knelt and in silent prayer
Asked the Father's aid and protecting care.

Fell a sacred hush—for a form divine
Seemed to hover now by that hallowed shrine,
With a thankful joy was his warm heart thrilled
As he rose and glanced o'er the house well filled.

And he offered thanks that their hearts were right,
As their presence proved on that winter night
They had braved the blast and the stinging cold
For the sacred courts of the sheltering fold.

For his text he chose Matthew 5 and 7:
"To the merciful shall be mercy given,"
And he proved on earth such would blessing gain
And the final rest of the blest obtain.

Then they sang "Praise God whence all blessings flow,
And all creatures join in His praise below,
In the snow—outside— where the wind blew cold
Stood a poor old horse with no sheltering fold.

Does the poor old horse thus the penance pay
For the sins of men while they praise and pray,
Through the summer's heat and the winter's chill.
As he faithfully serves his master's will?

("THE TRUNDLE BED.")

I am sitting in the gloaming, through the past my Thoughts are roaming; and I'm thinking of the dearest joys the Path of life has led, and I find the path so dreary and again
So bright and cheery, where I rock my darling baby in his little trundle bed.

Oh! that time would stop its climbing that those little arms entwining,
Could remain for just one moment, but the time just onward sped,
And the little childish prattle, and the whistle, drum and rattle, is Removed as he's promoted, from the little trundle bed.

How I watch him as he's growing, and I watch the seed he's sowing,
And I pray to God for blessings on his manly little head. Yet at times
My heart is yearning and find my footsteps turning to the stairs up
To the attic, where is stored his trundle bed.

How my prayers for him are answered I can see, as he advances,
into manhood, and a mother's cares and worry fears and dread, are aroused,
For we are hearing of a war that sure is nearing and I go to Pray in silence at his little trundle bed.

Ah! 'its so! the bugles' calling, into line the men are falling, and
I see my boy among them with a proud uplifted head and my aching
Heart grows bigger, as I note his manly figure and I picture such a contrast to the little trundle bed.

So we part; "Good bye dear mother" give my love to every other, let me
Wipe away the tear drop, let me see a smile instead. In God's Hands I place my keeping, "Mother dear!" do not be weeping. He'll watch ore' me in the battle just as in my trundle bed.

Forward march! the boys have started with a cheer (it seemed Faint hearted,) yet they look so brave and feerless in their brilliant coats of red, and my misty eyes grow clearer and my thoughts
Are drawing nearer to the stairs up to the attic, where is Stored his trundle bed.

There I stood, "Oh heavenly father!" hear a broken hearted mother," guide my Boy amid the struggle, are the words I softly said and a still Voice safely whispered; 'tis for right your boy enlisted," God's eye
Watches o'er a battle, just as o'er a trundle bed.

God put aside my sorrow and I go about the morrow for I'm Proud by boys' a soldier when the inside fact I've read, for the War is not for greatness, nor for might, or power of conquest, but
For peace of future children, in their little trundle beds.

Yet as days go by I'm crying for I picture dead and dying, then I
See my darling hero in a noble charge he's led, and I see the enemy
Routed and his name the men have shouted, and I say
God bless the hero from my little trundle bed.

With the victor's trumpets blaring and the glistening bayonets glaring, see!
Our soldier boys returning who for right their blood have shed, and
We see the poor worn creatures, haggard looks the soldiers features, they've
Been in the long fought battle, for that little trundle bed.

Now I see; the lines have parted, "What is this!" I grow fainthearted,
For I see above the others and I know that curly head, then I hear a
Murmured mother, I want you I want no other, let us go
Thank God together near the little trundle bed.

'Oh! for Mother,' good-bye mother," every man would murmur mother
In the thickest of the battle, when the word to charge was said
And that name so dear and tender now in times of peace remember
That the hands that rule the world are those which rock the trundle bed.

DAVID Y. ROSS,

USE OF PICRIC ACID IN SURGERY

The Medical Record commenting on the use of picric acid in war surgery, says:

"T. F. Brown treated 3.000 cases during the Gallopoli campaign with picric acid since learning that this agent is four times more potent than carbolic acid in bactericidal properties. The routine treatment consists in the application to superficial wounds of one per cent. picric acid solution applied on thin gauze. The wound is thus left practically exposed to the air. Usually one dressing a day was sufficient.

"Suppurating sinuses were syringed with 0.5 to 1 per cent. of the solution twice daily, and hydrogen peroxide solution was used every two or three days to remove the debris. Arm and leg baths of 0.5 per cent solution for thirty minutes were used for suppurating fractures and crushed tissues with an occaional bath of hypertonic saline (salt solution) as a change. A 1 per cent. solution was found too strong for the delicate epithelium of new skin.

"The author believes that his experience justifies the opinion that picric acid solution kills bacteria without corroding effect and prevents suppuration; it stimuluates granulation of the tissues; it has marked anodyne properties eliminating the need of aspirin or morphine in most cases; it save much time by dispensing with hot fomentations, cotton wool lint, gutta percha tissue, etc. It may be used for the sterilization of the skin in surgical cases. It shortens the convalescent period.

"The contraindications to its use usually cited are:—First, coagulation of the tissue; this with the solutions used is so light that it is unnoticeable and there is no evidence of retardation in healing. A second contraindication is supposed to be its poisonous effect. In the 3,000 cases treated, not one showed any signs of poisoning.

DEPORTATION OF BELGIAN MEN LEAVES WOMEN AND CHILDREN MORE HELPLESS THAN EVER - - - -

Neutral protests do not prevent the Germans from continuing the deportation and enslavement of the able-bodied men who were left in unhappy Belgium—and we are powerless to stop it until we have won the war.

Meanwhile the Neutral Commission for Relief in Belgium, administered without pay by great-hearted Americans, is saving the women and children from starvation. Here we CAN help promptly and effectively, by giving generously to the Belgian Relief Fund.

More contributions than ever are needed, because the higher prices of foodstuffs, particularly wheat, have seriously increased the cost of feeding these millions of dependent Belgians. How much can you spare the victims of one of the blackest, most cold-blooded crimes?
