

A Real Bicycle For a Real Boy

"WHY don't you ride your bicycle to school any more, Bill?"

"Well, Dad, everybody laughs at it. The other boys ride rings round me, and call it the old boneshaker."

"Hmm! How long have you had it?"

"Why, it's three years, now."

You got it second-hand, Dad—remember?"

"That's right! What kind of bicycles have the other boys?"

"They're nearly all C. C. M.'s. The best ones are, anyway."

"I see. What make would you like best?"

"Why, of course, a C. C. M. Dad, every time!"

Dad Offers Him One for Passing

"Well, now, look here, Bill. If you'll pitch in at school and pass your exams, I'll get you one of those C. C. M. Bicycles. How does that strike you?"

"Dad, I'd do almost anything for a C. C. M. You just watch me!"

"That's the stuff! I've heard C. C. M. Bicycles well spoken of, and one should be a prize worth winning."

"It sure is. C. C. M.'s look so snappy and ride so easy. Pewee Bowman has one of the new models and it has the C. C. M. Triplex Crank Hanger. He loaned it to me yesterday for five minutes. Gee, it was just like riding on air!"

"Why, what difference does the Triplex Hanger make?"

"Well, there's never any looseness or tightness when you're pedalling. You feel that every single bit of weight you put on the pedals counts for speed."

"And the C. C. M. doesn't tire a fellow out, either, Dad. Why young Mac Reynolds—he's only half as big as me—rides around all day on his C. C. M. It never tires him out."

"And there's a special bike that I won't outgrow, Dad. It's equally good for a lad of nine or a youth of twenty. It's called the C. C. M. 18-inch Curved Bar Model."

"That's a fine idea, Bill. Dig in, now, pass your exams, and that C. C. M. bike is yours."

(Bill Passed All Right.)

THERE are over 1,000 C. C. M. Service Stations in Canada carrying genuine C. C. M. parts and giving C. C. M. service at reasonable cost. Look for the above sign.

In every respect. I do not intend to say very much more on that question, but I think that the tariff which we shall have in this country, after the United States tariff become operative, should be framed in such a way as to protect Canadian interests as far as possible. Of our total imports last year, amounting to a sum very considerably over $1,000,000,000, there came from the United States goods valued at $856,000,000 odd, or 69 percent of our total import trade. That fact in itself constitutes a sufficient reason why we should be very deliberate and careful in any changes we make to our tariff; we must of necessity in our own interests, wait until we see how the adverse legislation at Washington is going to affect us. Although no extensive revision of the tariff is being made, however, there are some changes due to one cause or another, particularly in respect of the trade agreement with the West Indies which was recently ratified by both houses.

In reference to the subject of taxation, the principal changes are the abolition of the business profits war tax, the removal of the so-called luxury tax and the increase in the rate of the sales tax, matters which will come up for consideration when the House is in Committee of Ways and Means. I think, Mr. Speaker, that is all I shall say on the subject of expenditure and taxation.

I might properly refer, before going further, to some of the state ments that have been made, and the attitude that has been assumed in this debate, by our friends on the Opposition side. The hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding), a former Minister of Finance, has voiced some rather strong free trade sentiments. Now, as every one is perfectly aware, our Opposition friends have not been very consistent on the important question of the tariff. From time to time, while in Opposition, they have strongly advocated free trade, but while in office they were unquestionably protectionist. Throughout the fifteen years the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's was Minister of Finance he was a consistent protectionist; he presented to the House every year a protectionist budget. He made no essential change in the tariff which the National party had in force up to the time his Government took office. While hon. gentlemen opposite were in office they had a protective tariff amounting to an average of nearly 27 percent; at the present time this government, whom they are pleased to describe as high protectionists, are carrying on the public affairs under a tariff which is about 5 percent less than that—a trifle over 22 percent. In the face of that, how can hon. gentlemen opposite talk free trade? A year ago when the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's was discussing the budget, he was inclined to the view that free trade was not practicable; that there was no such thing as free trade. I shall quote his words in a moment or two, and endeavor to show the contrast between his opinions then and those which he expresses now. Last year he did not seem anxious to fraternize with his friends to the left of him, the Agrarians; he rather gave them the cold shoulder. This year, however, it would appear, he is disposed to get closer to them, or have them draw closer to him. He evidently wants the two sides to coalesce and work together. Well, as a matter of fact, that is just what they are doing, conceal it as they will. Their object is to impede the government no matter what their assumed attitude may seem to be. One member on the other side gets up and utters some protective views, and another talks free trade. It is a drama; they are all actors, and each member of the dramatic personae has his own little part to perform. But the tout ensemble is a campaign against the government. What is the drama they are acting? A tangled web of political deception. Their object is to deceive the people with the ultimate object in view of getting into power. They want to throw dust in the eyes of the people; they are trying to pull the wool over their eyes. While they are ostensibly preaching free trade for the benefit of the public, they go round secretly and whisper confidentially into the ears of their friends, the manufacturers, that everything, from their viewpoint is safe and sound. They tell these people: "Don't be afraid of us. You know we did nothing to you before. Don't mind our talking this way about free trade; you know it means nothing. Let us say this and that about free trade for the sake of the effect; you know what we will do when we get in." That is the way they have been acting, Mr. Speaker, and in order that I may be able to convict them I shall quote from Hansard. I desire to read from the statements of the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's, quoting Hansard.

There are some things that we would do well to remember. In the first place, it may be well simply to remember that there never has been in the Dominion of Canada such a thing as free trade. There is not anything of the kind now, and with all due respect to those who may be described as extreme free traders, I think it is no wild guess to assert that there will be no absolute free trade in Canada within the life time of any man who sits in this House today. It is not practicable—

This is how he treated them last year: With all due respect to them, I take the view that free trade is not a practical question in our tariff discussions of today. He went on to say: There are some things that we would do well to remember. In the first place, it may be well simply to remember that there never has been in the Dominion of Canada such a thing as free trade. There is not anything of the kind now, and with all due respect to those who may be described as extreme free traders, I think it is no wild guess to assert that there will be no absolute free trade in Canada within the life time of any man who sits in this House today. It is not practicable—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear. Mr. McISAAC: I am glad my hon friends opposite like it so well. It is a matter of deception, it is only a little change in the way of putting the question before the people. The hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's said on May 10, inst: If there are any people in Canada who are contemplating the establishment of new lines of business in which they feel that tariff protection is necessary, I do them a friendly service when I say: "Don't do it."

He is dead against any protection this year, but he was rather inclined towards it a year ago. —because anybody who counts up on the continuance of a protective policy is bound to find that he is pursuing a delusion. (To Be Continued)

SWIFTS' ANIMAL FERTILIZERS

The planting season is here, and we have a supply of Fertilizer which is almost as necessary to use for a good crop as the seeds themselves. The crop must be fed from seed time to harvest and the Swifts' Animal Fertilizers will do it. They give a quick start, feed the plant through the growing season and right up to the harvest.

We have Swifts' Potato Fertilizer, a high grade brand for potatoes and vegetables, and Swifts' Animal Brand for roots and general crops.
