

What I did to cure a cough which was Racking my system to pieces.

One very hot evening last summer, while in the mountains, a cool breeze suddenly came which left me thoroughly chilled. Next day I felt a slight cold in my head but thought nothing of it. The following day the cold had developed into a cough. This kept up for some weeks but instead of getting better the cough kept getting worse. A tickling sensation developed in my throat. I tried everything I could think of to get rid of it. It was worse when I went to bed. As soon as I laid down the tickling sensation started and the only relief I could get was to sit up in bed. Towards morning, I sometimes, from sheer exhaustion, managed to get a little sleep. During all this time my cough was getting worse. Sometimes in these severe fits of coughing spasms I was left weak and exhausted. Anything I tried only gave me temporary relief. I couldn't take anything but liquid foods. I couldn't sleep. I was losing weight every day. At times I suffered the most intense agony with headaches. A friend of mine told me about Carnol. After trying it for three weeks I noticed that my cough was beginning to soften, that my appetite was returning, that the headaches had left me, that I slept longer. After taking seven bottles of Carnol, I am perfectly well and enjoying better health than I have ever had before in my life.

Writes Mrs. J. of Montreal Carnol is sold by your druggist and if you can conscientiously say, after you have tried it, that it hasn't done you any good, return the empty bottle to him and he will refund your money. 10-122 For Sale by Hughes Druggist

A Sweetheart at Thirty

THE STORY OF A WOMAN'S TRANSFORMATION By Marion Rubincam

DISAPPROVAL Chapter 23

We had arrived at the little town popularly known as the Corners—originally a place where three roads crossed and now a collection of small houses, stores and one moving picture theatre. I think both Mark and myself felt uncomfortable by this time. But Mark dismissed his feelings with one word—"Bosh!" and went and bought tickets for the show.

It was, I suppose a very bad show. But I saw so little in those days that the cheapest movie film was a thrilling event to me. The clothes the actresses wore seemed the last work in style and beauty—though the film must have been years old for that little house to get it—and the whole thing delighted me. Yet all the way through the evening I carried this uncomfortable feeling and when we drove home, I was glad that Mark ran his car faster. It made the trip shorter. "Did you mean what you said—that you won't?" he asked as we reached the farmhouse. "Yes, I answered, climbing down—unassisted as usual—from the machine. "Well, of course—it was all he said but his voice implied volumes.

"Mark," I said impulsively standing by the car. "There are a lot of things I'd like to tell you to say the next time you ask a woman to marry you." "Enid," he answered shortly, "you're a sentimental fool!" I sighed a little as I walked up to the dark house—for of course the family had gone to bed long ago. It was nearly 11. So this was my first proposal—and my last in all probability! For I was old and I was homely.

One of the greatest tragedies is to be a misfit in life. The woman who aspires to things far above herself, who has not the power to get them, will never be satisfied with the things on her level—or below—that she can get. Such a woman is a misfit. Yet if they steadily refuse the things that are lower, they may never reach the heights—but at least, they will have climbed a little higher. And this was myself. I did not know what I aspired to, but I did know that in something as sacred as love and marriage, it would be higher and better than Mark or else it would be nothing. I went indoors—we never locked up at night, not even since the horses were stolen. There was a light in the kitchen; when I went out there, Esther was sitting waiting for me.

Esther in negligee was a strange creature—though I did not think much of it then. Her neglected over grown figure was encased in a red flannel wrapper, faded into yellowish pink streaks and hideous enough to make the most exquisite woman terrible. "Why are you up?" I asked. I could think of nothing but illness to keep her up in the busy summer beyond 9 or 10.

"I wanted to know all about it," she said. Her little eyes were beady and eager. I wondered if I could avoid telling my conversation with Mark. "It was a nice show," I began. "They had one funny film, about a boy and a—"

"Enid Haines you know well enough what I want to hear about she interrupted sharply. Did he speak of didn't?" "Why do you think he did? I answered crossly, still wishing to avoid telling her. "Never mind I got some sense. Now tell me."

It was useless to keep anything from Esther. "Well, he did, if you want to know," I answered defiantly.

"Of course so!" Her face relaxed into lines of approval and of pleasure. "It is all settled!" I answered, dreading this. "I refused him." "You what? Her whole face tensed again, her eyes opened wide, her hair in loose straggly ends around her face, almost seemed to stand up. "I refused to marry him," I answered, trying to be calm—and trying not to be afraid of this woman who made us all stand around.

"Enid Haines! You don't mean to tell me—you don't mean to stand there and say that you were such a fool as to turn down Mark Uphorn?" "I mean I was just that much of a fool."

It took some minutes for her to believe it. I told her what he said as closely as I could remember it—strange, selfish, loveless proposal that it was. And when she heard it all, her mouth tightened up into a curious little shape. I knew what she was coming.

"Of course she said your Jim's sister, not mine, so nothing I can say will have any effect on you. And Lord knows you're of age and your own mistress. But I credited you with some sense! Now here you are, an old woman practically. You never had any bean but this man, and you couldn't help it if he left you and married another woman years ago. But here's a chance where Opportunity has knocked a second time, as you might say—and you hadn't sense enough to see it. You could have had him—he's a decent, respectable settled man. He's not handsome and he's not young—but the Lord knows, neither are you. Well, I've got nothing further to say. I've done all I can for you." She picked up the lamp and started up stairs.

Mystery Murder In Los Angeles

LOS ANGELES Calif., Aug. 29.—To the west's tales of mystery crime today was added the murder of Fred Oesterreich, wealthy Los Angeles and Milwaukee manufacturer. Oesterreich was found shot to death when neighbors, attracted by the screams of his wife, broke into the house. Mrs. Oesterreich, discovered locked in a closet, was liberated. "We went calling on friends," she said. "When we returned, shortly before midnight, I went to my bedroom. I heard a rush behind me. I was whirled into a closet and the door locked. Then I heard two shots."

SCHOOLS IN DENMARK

Why are we taxed for the upkeep of the common schools and the payment of the teachers? Certainly not that the children of this Agricultural province may win prominent positions abroad or that they may become lawyers, doctors or professors and all high places with profitable salaries, or that they may be so taught and trained that they will probably be disappointed with rural life and unfit for work on the farm. Evidently the schools of the children are maintained at the public expense in order that the mental instruction and training of the men and women of the future may incline them to remain here and to carry on farm work cheerfully and efficiently to the advantage of the province and their own comfort and wealth.

It is well known that this province has from nature the finest soil and the best subsoil in America, adaptable to the production of food and that the fisheries and the waters surrounding this island are productive and profitable when systematically and skillfully carried on. These primary interests of this Province may be developed to an incalculable extent if the manhood and womanhood of the Province will but remain in the Province and take an active and intelligent part in the work essential to the end that the people of the Province may become prosperous and rich to the measure of its capabilities.

In the neighboring provinces there are commercial and industrial cities and towns which will grow with the growth of population in this Canada of ours; and the home markets in these cities and towns will strengthen with the strength that results from additional consumers.

The facts and propositions are self-evident. P. E. Island may be called the Denmark of America. Its people may command the highest prices for their products in butter, cheese, pork, lamb, mutton, beef, seeds of potatoes and other vegetables and grains, if only they will do as the Danes have done. Denmark education is compulsory. An interesting article in The National Geographic Magazine for August, written by the United States Minister to Denmark, affords an insight to the course of education followed in the schools of that most successful of agricultural countries. It is stated that "everything depends upon the spirit of the people and the education afforded in the Danish schools is calculated to create a spirit of pride and the desire to excel in respect to those operations of the farm which are most productive of wealth for the farmers."

It is stated that one of the most interesting of all the types of the "folk-school" is that for girls and women who are the wives and daughters of small farmers. The influence of the mother in the inculcation of the "farm spirit" and in the direction of the nation's activities is recognized. It is stated that only a visit to one of these "folk-schools" can make it understood how thoroughly the work is done. "Without parade or ostentation each girl learns the secret of leading this simple life cheerfully. "She is taught not to waste anything and above all to take a pride in not wasting anything. A cheerful spirit of helpfulness is inculcated. Hurry and worry are entirely excluded. The art of making haste slowly is very much in vogue."

Again it is possible for an elderly woman who helps to support herself and her family by selling eggs to solve the problem why her hens do not lay more freely, by attending a course, say of two weeks. Her expenses and board are paid by the Commune, which wisely holds that the prosperity she acquires in a valuable asset to the community—and she goes back with an answer to her question. And the answer has not been merely academic—she has seen model hen-houses and has learned by observation." When she returns home her husband who may have some trouble as to the yield of his three or four acres takes her place at the school on the same terms. Thus the variety of life corrects the monotony of farming and the management of the little place is left to chance."

The students in the peoples high schools, men and women, are generally from eighteen to thirty years of age, and it is considered rather derogatory for a farmer's son or daughter not to have had the advantages of at least one semester of these schools. On the other hand "the teachers in the Danish schools believe it to be their duty to increase the desire for information in the minds of the students—to broaden, to stimulate them, to divert them from the every-day drudgery of farm life and to induce them, through an appeal to religion and nationality, to feel that their work is noble—in a phrase, to give the agricultural population a lively interest in all things of good repute and to induce them to believe that a certain amount of happiness is within their grasp."

Team work—you may call it co-operation if you will—is at the very heart of the success of the high schools. As the terms of the schools must be divided into two—November to March for the men and the summer months for women and girls—each period is of five months duration."

In the Danish agricultural schools it is pointed out, evidence of preference most afforded for general education. These schools are generally attended by—farmers with from fifteen to fifty acres, which under the Danish system of intensive cultivation and accurate rotation of crops is considered rather substantial. The small holders, who have from three to ten acres and who add to their livelihood, have schools of their own in which their practical problems are considered. The results of compulsory education in respect to farm operations are shown in the fact that "in the thirty years from 1881 to 1912, the value of the exports of Denmark's standard agricultural products—bacon, eggs and butter—increased from $12,000,000 to $125,000,000. Waste and wornout lands have been reclaimed and renewed. Co-operation in production and marketing has become more common than in any other country. Landlordism and farm tenancy, have almost disappeared. Rural social life has become intelligent, organic and laboring. At the other end of the scale, the masses of the people. A real democracy has been established. These results are declared by the highest authorities in Denmark to be "the outgrowth of an educational system universal, practical and democratic. Does it not seem to be reasonable to conclude that the educational system of Prince Edward Island should approximate that of Denmark rather than that of countries which are not chiefly agricultural?"

In this connection it may be noted that "no teacher in the rural parts of Denmark 'boards around.' Married male teachers have houses of seven or eight rooms placed at their disposal each—always including a garden very near the school-house. The garden is indispensable. Each teacher manages to grow his own vegetables and fruit. Unmarried women teachers are provided with two or three rooms each and each teacher has a separate entrance to the house in which she lives. Further, it may be observed that when a teacher has served in the schools for twenty years he or she is entitled to a pension which, until recently, had the purchasing power of from $1,200 to $1,900 in Denmark. The amount of the pension "depends on the length of service and sick or disabled teachers are looked after in a pecuniary way. If the example of Denmark were followed—even at a distance—in P. E. Island it is possible that the complaint that "our best teachers go away" would not long be heard throughout the country. W.L.C.

Ford To Close All His Plants

DETROIT, Aug. 30.—One hundred and five thousand employees of the Ford Motor Company throughout the country will be without jobs after September 16. In addition several hundred thousand other workers employed in industries furnishing materials for the Ford plants will be affected.

Henry Ford gave these figures on Saturday in announcing that his three big motor plants located in Detroit suburbs and his assembling plants throughout the country would be closed on that date because of the coal shortage. The announcement was the most severe blow that industrial Detroit has sustained since the industrial depression of two years ago. It means, according to Mr. Ford, that 750,000 men employed in the Highland Park, River Rouge and Dearborn Plants of the company here will be without work. Thirty thousand others now working in the various assembling plants scattered throughout the country, also will be thrown out of employment.

How long the machinery in the Ford plants is to be still in the depend entirely upon the coal supply of the future, the Detroit manufacturer said. Mr. Ford criticized the fuel distribution machinery, which he said, had made it impossible for his railroad, the Detroit, Toledo and Ironton, to obtain sufficient fuel at the various junctions to keep his factories here supplied. The price of steel and other materials also entered into the decision to suspend operations. Mr. Ford said, adding that he had received notice of an advance in steel prices to be made shortly. In his stand against prices of coal and steel, the manufacturer took the same position that prompted his decision to cease operations two years ago—that prices asked were unwarranted and that he would prefer a suspension of work and a greater financial loss to the payment of higher prices on materials.

In the United States most "throw up his hands in surrender" within a few weeks, if the rail and coal strikes continue. Mr. Ford declared. Mr. Ford held financial interests responsible for the industrial tie-up declaring, the "money bar-drudgery of farm life and to induce them, through an appeal to religion and nationality, to feel that their work is noble—in a phrase, to give the agricultural population a lively interest in all things of good repute and to induce them to believe that a certain amount of happiness is within their grasp."
