AIR FORCE GRADUATES

OTTAWA, Sept. 27.—(The Canadian press). The first provisional graduation list of the Canadian Air Force was issued today. It gives three wing commanders, each of the trio being a colonel who has seen much actual flying service, sixteen squadron leaders and considerably over1,000 flightlieutenants. Complete lists arebeing mailed today to the Provincial Secretaries of Dominion flying bodies. Almost without exception the men have been service overseas.

SEATTLE HAS FLEET OF 139 STEAMERS

SEATTLE,Sept. 28.—A fleet of 134 ocean carriers totaling 1,003,200 weight tons in cargo capacity and manned by crews totalling more than 8,000 men, is operating from Seattle on the trade lanes of the seven seas. This fleet is more than double the number of ships in service here in 1914, and the cargo capacity also is double that of six years ago. In August, 1914, the overseas lines numbered 11, today they total 24, and this fall Seattle is to have for the first time in its history a direct line of American-owned passenger steamships between this port and the Orient.

It is reported here that representatives of the Holland- American Steamship Line will carry apples from Seattle to European ports in strapped boxes for $1.65 per box, and it is likely that one-fifth of the great Yakima crop may be shipped to Great Britain by water if refrigeration on ship-board can be had, with the first sailing late in September. Increased shipment of Washington's apple crop, the greatest of any state in the Union, to eastern destination by water as a result of the increase in rates, is predicted.

It is easier for a father to keep his coin and his boy apart than it is for him to teach them to stick together.

JUST A GIRL

BY JANE PHELPS

MR. CLAXTON ASKS TO CALL.

Chapter 129.

"Yes, I wrote Kenneth Lawrence. I gave him my address," I replied slowly to Mother's question. Some way I felt a reluctance to talk of Kenneth, even to her.

"Have you heard from him since you wrote?"

"Yes, just a short letter. He says he may come to Chicago before long. His superintendent is away and he is very busy."

"You will be glad to see him, I expect. Although we did not know him very well.' Mother had said "we" as was natural to her. In the old days my friends were her friends too. I was not allowed to receive anyone they did not know. Kenneth had been Claudia's cousin, and so welcomed. But neither Father or Mother knew him well. But I felt that I did—not only as I remembered him, the good times we had together, but as I had held him in my thoughts ever since.

"I shall be glad to renew the acquaintance," I replied quietly. As I said it my heart beat more rapidly and I felt my face flush. I changed the conversation before Mother noticed.

In the days that followed I was often tempted to tell her how I felt about Kenneth Lawrence. But it seemed so foolish in me to have held him so in my thoughts all these years without knowing anything of his feeling for me—or what it would be when he saw me so changed—that I said nothing. He was almost a phantom lover—if such a term as "lover' could be used—a dream companion whom I had endowed with al lthat makes a man desirable.

Perhaps he, too, had changed. I dismissed the thought almost as soon as it came. He had been a ranchman when I met him, was still one, while I and my life had altered in every particular. But not even to Mother would I confess my fear that he might be disappointed when he saw how different I was from the happy, carefree girl he had known. Not that I wasn't happy, especially now that I had Mother with me, but I had lost much of the vivacity, the girlishness that had been mine in the long ago before Dad left us.

Mother had written Mr.Claxton a litle note of thanks for her flowers and I also had told him how we had appreciated his thoughtfulness.

"I wish I might do more," he said with a glance that made me flush. "I am very glad for you Miss Stewart. May I call on your Mother and you some evening?"

"Certainly! Mother will be pleased."

"And you?"

"I of course will feel honored." My reply was a bit sarcastic, but I seemed unable to help it.

"It is I who shall feel honored if you let me come.'

That was all. The words were commonplace enough, yet unusual between employer and employee. But I felt that he meant what he said. That was one thing about Frank Claxton—you felt sure he never said anything he didn't mean. If I was pleased, and if Mother also appeared a bit elated, it could not be wondered at: I had told her just what he said, and she had remarked:

"I am quite anxious to meet this man who has been so kind to you. It is kind in him to call—yet Zena, we must not feel that he is doing us too much of a favor. You are his equal in every way save in that we have no money. He recognizes this I am sure, and that explains many things you have told me of him. I am positive I shall like him."

"Of course you will, and he will like you. I can just see his face when he meets you, Mother. You look just what you are, you know, a born aristocrat and a real old dear who is as brave and courageous as they make them." I often lapsed into a sort of slang which at first had worried Mother. But she had become accustomed to it, and now only smiled.

"Why shouldn't I be courageous when I have such a daughter?

Mother was very frail. Her only complaint had been that she was unable to earn money and so make my burden lighter. But she never had recovered from the shock of Dad's death, never been at all strong since. For her to be confined to any sort of work was out of the question. At times I feared that even the keeping of our little home would be too much for her, and would insist upon either doing the heavy cleaning myself at night, or upon hiring it done—which as yet was a bit extravagant.

A few days after he had asked if he might call, Frank Claxton came.
