BILL LOOKED LIKE HE'D BE THE STAR OF THE RED SOX ABOUT A YEAR AGO BUT SLUMPED. HE'LL BE TRYIN' TO MAKE IT UP THIS SUMMER.

I HOPE CARRIGAN SEES THIS!

THE RED SOX INFILTERS ARE STILL FIGHTIN' FOR REGULAR JOBS.

GRANVILLE STILL GOING STRONG

SPRINGFIELD, Mo., April 30—(C. P.)—Phil Granville, Hamilton, Ont., ran the 41 miles from Conway, Mo. to Springfield, Mo., in 5:58.40 today to check in seventh, the position he holds in elapsed time.

Granville's elapsed time in 223:53.15. He lost three minutes to Sam Richman, of New York, sixth in elapsed time, who finished just ahead of him.

Today's lap was captured by Pete Gavuzzi, of England, who ran the distance at a pace approaching ten miles an hour.

SYDNEY CLUB GETS $1,500

SYDNEY, April 30—Over $1,500 has been contributed toward the purchase of a Sydney community racing horse in less than a week according to a report received at a meeting of the Horseman's club held here last night to receive the report of the canvassing committee. It is expected that the objective of $3,000 will be reached before the present week is over and then the plans will be completed for the purchase of the horse. Frank Fitzgerald presided at the meeting and in order to hurry along the campaign L. Snell, Don Buckley and Dick Logue were added to the canvassing committee.

With an all-British cast and an English setting, Britain will soon have its first 100 per cent British talkie, but the producer will be an American.

When a third baseman of one major league ball club figures in a deal where he is thrown in with other players for a third baseman from a rival ball club, the job-lot player sometimes tries to show by his work that the fellow who traded him is a few-an-go-boomer!

In other words, a trade like that sometimes makes a star out of a mediocre player when the humiliated fellow really has something to start with.

Last winter such a deal was pulled off between the Washington Senators and the Boston Red Sox. Buddy Myer on his payroll and Clark Griffith seemed to take a notion all of a sudden, that Buddy would bolster up the Senators no end. That was somewhat strange, as Buddy had been with the Senators before he went to Boston. But ball magnates are funny that way, and Carrigan, sensing that Clark wanted Buddy badly, made him pay through the nose for the third-sacker.

Among the fellows secured by Carrigan in the deal for Myer was a chap named Bob Reeves. Last year

Reeves played the short field for the Senators. Beside playing his own spot on the lot, Bob had to help Goose Goslin relay throws back from the outer garden, and the youngster often had to do considerable chasing around during an afternoon. But he did it without kicking up a fuss and made quite a good job of it all.

This spring at Bradenton the Boston pilot was polishing Reeves off for the hot corner assignment, and he's likely to be seen there a lot during the present campaign.

One thing is certain. Reeves is determined to make Griffith all-fired sorry that he ever traded him off. It isn't the fact that he was swapped to Boston that gets under Bob's skin, but the fact that he was one of quite a herd that the Senators had to give up for one lone player. Reeves is anxious to prove by his work that if Griffith had been smart he could have traded him even-up for Myer and that Carrigan would have still thought he got the best of the deal. Professional jealousy isn't confined to the stage, and it often pays returns to the owners of ball clubs.

While Carrigan may do some experimenting with his infield during the early part of the season this year, there's likely to be a steady job found for "Silent Bill" Regan down around the keystone bag. Last year Regan did considerable toward helping the Red Sox win games. It is true that they might have won more, but Bill in his quiet way was responsible for a lot of those they did win. Bill batted in seventy-five tallies for the scarlet-hoed gang and led the team in that respect—which is a fairly good respect. The Silent One did some hefty smashing with the mace early last season, but for some unknown reason he couldn't crack the onion at Fenway Park, the home lot the Sox. Out on the road and away from home, Bill performed like a Middle Westerner on his first trip to Paris. At Fenway Park he folded up and was about as bolsterous as a Georgia cracker after Sharkey won that Miami decision over Stribling. If he could have kept up his traveling stride while he was at home, Regan could easily have finished among the 300 swatters.

No matter what Carrigan eventually decides to do about his infield problems—if any—Reeves and Regan are going to be two tough fellows to keep out of the games. Reeves has a worthy mission to perform and Regan wants to prove to the home folks that he really got those bingles he was credited with on the road last Summer.

AT THE VICS INDOOR CIRCUS

Joe O'Brien redeemed himself in the realms of Flitana last night when he crashed a long overhand right to the cranium of Stanley Steele. It was Joe's big night. He insists on meeting all comers tonight.

The biggest house of the week crowded past the wicket last evening. Jack Lund won the door prize.

Tonight Kaney McDonald and Tommy Benoit will swap punches in a four rounder. "Joe" will also box. The ring will be improved for tonight's bouts.

CHOCOLATE DEFEATS TOMMY RYAN

NEW YORK, April 30—Kid Chocolate, stiff punching Cuban, knocked out Tommy Ryan, of Buffalo, in the first round of their ten round match in the Broadway Arena last night. Chocolate weighed 122 pounds, Ryan 128.

Chocolate smothered his heavier rival from the opening bell and ended matters for the evening after one

The Master Of Ballyhoo

Condensed from The North American Review—Jack Koford

Tex Rickard was preeminently the king of Ballyhoo. He knew a good story when he saw it, and he was a master of the art of space grabbing.

The impetus that started him on the career by which he became famous was the desire of Goldfield, Nevada, to get some publicity. No one in the desert town knew what to do. Tex suggested a championship prize fight; the idea was seized upon with avidity, and he was elected to the job of putting it over, because he was known from Alaska to the Panhandle as the squarest shooter in the West. The sour-doughs, prospectors, and roulette players all trusted the quiet, tight mouthed gambler, who could win or lose a hundred thousand dollars without a change of expression. When he owned the Northern Saloon in Nome he often had as much as $100,000 of the miners' money stowed away in his safe. He knew the owners only by sight and they never asked for receipts. And not one of them ever put a penny through that trust.

So Tex left his house of chance in charge of his partner, while he bent his energies toward making Goldfield famous.

Now—after 23 years—we can appreciate the magnitude of Rickard's task. At that time Goldfield had a population of 2500. To get there one had to ride 13 hours into the desert from the main line. It was necessary to construct an arena at a cost of $15,000. A purse of $30,000 was required to bring "Battling" Nelson and Joe Gans together. Many thought this purse so much fiction. But when the newsgatherers arrived they saw the purse stacked in glittering gold pieces in the window of the bank. It was a touch of genius, and the story was broadcast.

Tex was completely dumbfounded when he saw newspaper men from all over the United States flocking into Goldfield, and more than 8000 people gathered at the ringside. He was still more surprised when the books showed a substantial profit where he had only asked for publicity and a not too heavy loss.

Tex knew instinctively that the way to get lineage was to be unusual. When he signed Gene Tunney for the first dramatic fight with Dempsey he said nothing about it. He kept the newspapers speculating on whether or not the fight would be held. Then, as a grand gesture, he hired a special train, filled it with sports writers, and ran them to St. Louis to see Tunney go minute and 55 seconds of the first round.

After a series of jabs and uppercuts the "Kid" crashed over a heavy left hook that dropped Ryan for a count of eight. The Buffalo lad staggered to his feet only to run into a storm of punches. He stood up under the barrage for a few seconds and then a left hook sent him to the canvas where he was counted out.

GREAT BRITAIN ENTHUSIASTIC OVER VICTORY

LONDON, April 30 — English Golfers expect every man to do his duty in the British Open at Muirfield, starting next Monday.

The British victory over Walter Hagen's Americans in the Ryder Cup series, conducted Saturday, has filled Englishmen with confidence that some native born golfer will win the open this year.

Not even the presence of an American contingent of 22 can do more than slightly diminish that confidence.

The Ryder Cup victory has brought with it a volume of editorial comment. Paying tributes to Hagen for his candid admission of a bad defeat, the Telegraph said: "Let us admit with equal candor that it was a victory which British golf needed."

Recalling the new auto speed record set by Maj. Seagrave and Britain's cricket victories over Australia, the Telegraph sees in them evidence that enterprise, vigor and resolution yet abound in English sport.

A total of 242 have entered the open, some fifty of them amateurs. The field is to be divided into two sections for the qualifying rounds.

TROPHY ON EXHIBITION

Much interest is manifested in a large and beautiful trophy now on display in the north window of J. W. Robblee's store on Great George St. This trophy is the gift of the Tip Top Tailors, Toronto, and was brought here by Mr. A. B. Bradley, their representative. "The handsome piece of silverware will be awarded to some athletic organization in the city. Mr. Robblee intends within a day or two to open a free voting contest, the Trophy going to the Club getting the most votes. All Clubs are eligible. Tennis, Golf, League of the Cross, Y. M. C. A., Abegweit, Victorias and all school athletic organizations.

It is understood however, that anyone voting for his or her particular Club must at first show a membership ticket.

To mark the Universal Postal Union Conference in London this year, English post office experts designed a new series of stamps.

Believed to be the oldest woman in England, Mrs. James Chamberlain, of Weston-super-Mare, died recently at the age of 105.

In a recent month unassembled automobile chassis received into Australia from the United States were valued at $1,650,000.

Air taxis to carry two, four or six passengers will be available on demand at the new air-drome at Manchester, England.
