School Teachers' Meeting

A meeting of the school teachers of Eldon, Uigg, Newton, Iona, Pinette and all surrounding districts, will be held in the public Eldon Hall on Monday the 16th inst. at 3 p.m. (old time.) A public meeting of all ratepayers and those interested in education will be held in the evening at 8 o'clock (old time.) I want all the ratepayers and teachers that can possibly attend these meetings to be present. Superintendent Campbell and several other leading speakers will be present, there will also be a short musical programme.

School Rate, Payers of Prince Edward Island

We feel that you appreciate the fact that the Teachers' Union is withholding action until the result of the plebiscite to be taken at the next election is known and that the Union is desirous of not resorting to harsh measures. But in the meantime be fair to teachers by voting them a fair supplement at your annual meeting next Tuesday. Teachers are fast leaving the Province. Would you have your schools vacant? The welfare of education in this province is at stake. Can you afford not to rise to the occasion? The Teachers' Union of P. E. I. 6336-6-14M21.

Autoists

A word to the wise is sufficient. Do not have your cars overhauled by inexperienced parties. You will find it much cheaper to have them repaired and placed in perfect running order by our experts. REMEMBER what the wear and tear of your car will cost by being imperfectly overhauled. The services of experts are most essential.—We have them.—Every car repaired at our establishment is under the most complete supervision.—The work done by us will be most satisfactory to the owner as well as a pleasure to ourselves. We supply the extras for any car.

PANIC IN BRITAIN OVER RABIES

The first panic over rabies in twenty-one years is spreading through England. Several cases developed in the country recently and two were discovered in London in the past week. The Board of Agriculture has issued an order that all dogs in London and surrounding countries must be muzzled or led, and that none can be taken in or out of these boundaries. If a stray dog seems excited and runs fast he is pursued and stoned to death. Three hundred stray dogs were executed in the lethal chamber, Battersea, in one day. Some owners are taking their pets there to be put to death by gas as the most merciful manner in which to deal with the situation. The newspapers claim that wealthy women are smuggling their dogs away in railroad trains, and demand a penalty or imprisonment for endangering the lives of others. There are rumours, but no proofs, that the disease was introduced by soldiers' dogs brought across the Channel in airplanes to evade the standing quarantine against dogs.

BY JANE PHELPH NEILS LIFE JOB

CHAPTER CXVII. Neil really was very brave. He had a staggering load of debt facing him after all was settled. Scott and one or two others whom he owed large amounts were to take payment in installments with interest. When I thought of it I was frightened, but never let Neil think I doubted his ability to pay them. "A life job," he had said once when he spoke of what he owed. All the small investors had been paid. We had taken a tiny home on Long Island, near enough so Neil could commute cheaply. I was doing my own work, and happy in helping all I could. It had been more of a wrench than I had thought it was going to be to leave our lovely home, and at the end I shed a few tears. But now I was resigned and tried by keeping busy to forget that we had not only lost home, but friends as well. Of all the society people with whom we had mixed only two or three had called upon me, or noticed my existence in any way after the papers had aired Neil's troubles. Strange Mrs. Powers was one of them. It seemed her husband had met Neil in the street, had stopped and spoken to him. Neil had told him he was trying to satisfy his customers, and Mr. Powers had immediately become interested, and had asked him many questions. He must have seen how penitent Neil was how anxious to make reparation, and it had softened him toward us. Mrs. Powers said he had told her that Neil was more sinned against than sinning, and that he had faith in him. She only remained a few moments, but nothing could have happened to give Neil more pleasure. But she and Lorraine Morton were about the only women who sympathized in any way with me. All save Blanche Orton. You see Blanche had lost to. She had lost what Neil had paid her for or providing entertainment and suppers for his followings. "I guess I shall have to take boarders," she had said with some bitterness. "I have to live, and can't do anything but manage servants, and set a good table. Really it is a crime to bring up a girl to know nothing she can put to use if the necessity arises. Boys are taught something by which they can be independent and earn a decent living. While girls—most of them—are taught they must marry, and a few silly accomplishments on the side." She looked so lovely even in this petulant mood that I replied: "You will probably marry again some day."

"You bet I will if I get a chance!" was her astonishing answer. "I'd be a fool not to. But I am going to tell you something. I would like to marry a man I could love. I never really loved Orton, although he was very good to me. But I married him for his money. I hated poverty all ways. I guess the Bible is right when it says that "Money is the root of all evil." It has caused all my unhappiness—the love of it I mean, and the lack of it. Oh, well, something will turn up I suppose."

"There surely will. And Mrs. Orton it is wonderful what one can bear and still go on living. It has seemed to me at times that I couldn't bear another single thing. That I must give up. Then something would happen to give me courage again, and I would wonder how I could be so foolish as to think there was nothing but trouble left for me."

She came to see me several times before we left for our new home, and each time I liked her better, discovered something new in her. She was capable, clever, and was wasting herself, I told her so, and she while laughing at me, admitted that she was so. "I eat, sleep, and am NOT merry," she misquoted. Then told me she had rented her house for a good price, and that she was going abroad. "One can live on what they would starve on here. My house is rented for five years. I have a little saved. I shall stay as long as my money lasts, then come back." Someway I envied her her careless talking of things which came to her while I knew very well I never could do the same.

I bade her good bye the day she said with real regret. As I turned away from the dock I thought what a queer world it is. My eyes were misty at parting with the woman who had at one time made me so miserable—simply because I had misjudged her. I wondered if it were not often so. If we were more charitable, would we not be happier.

Tomorrow—Neil is Grateful for Frederick's Help.

Notice re Hogs

As the weather is too warm now for shipping DRESSED HOGS without considerable risk of damage, we intend to discontinue receiving them after Tuesday next 27th inst. We will continue buying live hogs at usual shipping points for the balance of this month, so long as there are enough available to make car-lots, paying legitimate market price.

By the early fall again, or soon as any quantity of hogs worth while are ready, we will resume packing operations, and as a matter of mutual interest would urge upon farmers the advisability of having hogs ready as early as possible in September.

The outlook is for high prices.
