Marriage Scales

By Mildred Barbour.

"WHO IS THE MAN?"

If Doris had been at home that bright June afternoon to receive Mariana's call, the subsequent story of the Summer-Page-Cullam triangle would have been vastly different.

But Doris, at the particular moment when Mariana held the telephone receiver impatiently to her ear and listened with vexation to Central's futile ringing, was lunching with Craig Cullam in a cool roof garden of a hotel overlooking the river, blissfully oblivious of the fact that her own sister was endeavoring to tell her of her infatuation for the man across the table—the man who looked at her with a message in his eyes which she could neither ignore nor force into words.

It so happened that Doris' maid had the afternoon off and Mariana's call went unrecorded.

When evening came and the return of Charles from his daily round of golf was heralded by a great splashing and lusty singing in the direction of his bath, Mariana made herself beautiful with unusual care.

Although they were dining at home, she chose a brilliant evening gown that revealed all of her white sholders and rounded arms. She thrust a high Spanish comb of emeralds in her dark hair and there were sparkling buckles of the same stones on her satin slippers. The excitement of what she was about to do lent brilliance to her eyes and a becoming color to her creeks. Her lips without rouge were carmine and provocative.

She was a distractingly lovely creature to ask any man to give up.

She knew it, and, with unconscious cruelty, she had willed it so. With that curious dramatic instinct which lurks in the hearts of most women, she wanted to burn herself into the memory of the man she was discarding to be remembered as most infinitely and alluringly desirable at the very moment of love's renunciation.

Charles' eyes lit up with admiration when he came down to the drawing room and found her playing softly at the piano.

"I say, you look bully tonight! But why all the festive togs. Are we going out?"

She shook her head, smilingly, and left off her playing.

"I dressed for your benefit."

Relief and tenderness spoke simultaneously in Charles's ruddy, good-natured face.

He slipped an arm across her bare shoulders and touched his cheek awkwardly to her hair.

"You make me feel awfully humble sometimes, Mariana," he said huskily.

Quick tears sprang into Mariana's eyes. She pushed him away. The scene wasn't going at all as she had planned it. This was a bad way to bring up the situation which should explain to Charles that she no longer wished to be his wife.

She was very pleasant, even gay, during dinner. Charles was so relieved by her return to spirits after her listlessness of the past weeks, that he turned a lofty shoulder to his prescribed dietary and indulged heartily in forbidden starches and sweets. As a result, he was more than usually happy and mellow when they adjourned to the library for coffee. He was even feeling socially inclined.

"Sure you don't want to go somewhere this evening, honey?" he inquired. "Alan Harrington suggested we come over for a game, and I told him we might drop in if you felt like it."

Mariana nodded absently, as she filled his cup.

"I know. Linda called me—but I said no. As a matter of fact, I'd rather stay at home tonight. I have something to talk to you about—something important."

Charles accepted the cup from her hand, laughingly.

"I'll bet you've bought something that's put a dent in your bank account. Never mind, dearest I'll make it good. And if you'd only go to Canada with me, I'd buy you that necklace you're so crazy for." He looked down at her from his easy posture on the hearthrug.

Mariana shrugged with a return of her old petulance.

"Please don't treat me like a child! This is a very serious matter, one which I have given dat thought. Charles—"

She looked up at him, seized with sudden, unaccountable trembling.

"Charles," she repeated breatalessly, "I—I want you to give me my freedom!"

The crash of the fragile china cup from Charles hand to the hearthrug was her immediate answer.

She found herself unable to look up.

After a minute Charles spoke quietly but in a voice she scarcely recognized: "Who is the man?"

WOMEN OF MIDDLE AGE

Relieved of Nervousness and Other Distressing Ailments by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Brooklyn, N. Y.—"I first took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound four years ago, and am taking it now for the Change of Life and other troubles and I receive great benefit from it. I am willing to let you use my letter as a testimonial because it is the truth. I found your booklet in my letter box and read it carefully, and that is how I came to take the Vegetable Compound myself. It has given me quiet nerves so that I sleep all night, and a better appetite. I have recommended it already to all my friends and relatives."—Mrs. ENGLEMANN, 2032 Palmetto St., Ridgewood, Brooklyn, N. Y.

For the woman suffering from nervous troubles causing sleeplessness, headache, hysteria, "the blues," Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will be found a splendid medicine. For the woman of middle age who is passing through the trials of that period, it can be depended upon to relieve the troubles common at that time.

You should give it a fair trial now.

THE "PENSIONS (INCREASE) ACT 1920."

This ACT was passed into Law by the Imperial House of Commons in August 1920, by which ALL State Pensioners with Pensions of LESS than £200 (Married) or £150 (Unmarried) were allowed to have an increase of their pension, if awarded before August 1914.

But all of those participating in the ACT had to live INSIDE the United Kingdom, so that those State Pensioners who are living elsewhere were penalised for so living outside the United Kingdom.

However the State Pensioners National Joint Committee commenced work immediately after the ACT was passed to have the many restrictons removed, including the residence outside the U. K., and they have been successful at last in having that particular restriction removed, the second Reading of the Amending Act having been read for the second time in the House of Commons a short time ago.

It is more than probable that there are some State Pensioners living in the area in which this Periodical crculates, who have never heard of this Act and its amendment, and are thus not applying to the Imperial Authorities for the increase due to them from the 1st July 1923.

If these State Pensioners will apply to Captain P. B. Garrett, C. B. E., R. N., Carlton House, Lower Regent Street, LONDON, S. W. I., he will be delighted to assist them in obtaining what is due to them.

They must send him all the necessary particulars to allow him to mak application together with a fee of 2s.6d., to cover the expenses of postage, etc.

It should be pointed out that it is more than probable that the Pensioner living abroad will not be informed of this amendment, the Authorities will expect the Pensioner to apply for the increase, and the Pensioner not knowing about this will fail to do so, and will therefore fail to obtain what is due to the Pensioner.

THAT CAR OF YOURS

BY HARRY E. PORTER

This is a series of articles pertaining to maintenance and repair of your Automobile. We will be glad to answer through this column, questions regarding your car or its mechanism.

Send your inquries to "Automobiles, "The Guardian Publishing Co. Ltd., Charlottetown.

Do you know that when you use your starter for one starting of your motor, you use current to the extent that is requires five hours of 10 ampere to replace it?

The battery of your car and its maintenance is of vital importance and every owner should be acquainted with its operation and care, (by writing the Guardian Office we will be glad to send you pamphlet on this subject) but the rudiments of successful battery operation is this:—Consider your method of driving. If you stop and re-start your car ten or a dozen times a day, you cannot expect other than a discharged battery in a short time.

It is therefore better, when making calls of short duration, (say of ten minutes) to leave the engine running with the emergency brake applied, sooner than stop the motor and restart it.

In some cities this practice is illegal, but it can always always be done in the country.

If you try this you will find that if your car is suffering from battery trouble through persistent discharge, it will alleviate the difficulty considerably.

Ques.—I have trouble with my Car locking in the extreme left or right direction when turning.

I have had the steering re-bushed, but it does not stop the trouble Can you advise me what to do?

John L.

Ans. The radius rods in this particular car entirely control proper steering and it is apparent that these radius rods are bent.

Stand by the side of your front wheel and look at the king bolt. The top must tip towards the rear of the car. If it does not do this, instal a new radius rods when your trouble will be remedied.

Ques.—Does a loose connecting rod affect the power of an automobile? F. G. Charlottetown.

Ans.—Yes. Owing to the fact that some of the original stroke is lost owing to the clearance between the shaft and the babbit.
