A Sweetheart At Thirty

THE STORY OF A WOMAN'S TRANSFORMATION
By Marion Rubincam

REMINISCENCE

Chapter 10

One afternoon in early May, a Saturday that had been as blue and as cloudless as the best of the June weather, we were sitting out on the farmhouse porch. We had all worked hard that day and this was a little interlude between the day's cleaning, the preparation for the gigantic dinner that always took place on Sunday the preparation of that evening's meal, and the milking.

Esther was resting; she had been at it hard since early morning. I was doing some of the drawn work for Vi's dress. And Vi herself was out on the lawn in the sun her hair hanging about her shoulders. The light caught her gold hair, shampooed that day, and made it shine like polished metal. From time to time I glanced at her, my eyes drawn by the sheer pleasure of looking at the brilliant mass of hair.

Esther, lying back in a rocker followed my eyes.

"She has dark hair, hasn't she?" she asked. "Looks well after it's been washed. Now I never can make mine do anything I want for weeks, and Laura's hair is too limp to look well either. But Vi can do her's up as nice right after washing as before."

She observed her daughter pensively.

"I don't know where Vi got her yellow hair," she went on. "The Haines are mostly dark—Jim's hair was black, yours was dark too, once—a casual glance at my mouse colored head followed."

"My mother had sort of nice hair but it was brown too. Vidoesn't look like either family; guess she was sort of slipped in."

These elementary studies in heredity are common among mothers, and are a hopeful sign. The only trouble seems to be that the mothers speculate as to where the children obtained certain characteristics. If they would only go further and study the traits of the families, in order to combat inherited weaknesses.

But Esther of course never went in for anything so profound.

"Some times I think Vi looks like me sometimes like Jim," she went on. "Your Pa used to say she looked like you when she was a baby. But Lord, you don't look more alike!" She laughed contentedly, swaying back and forth in the rocker.

"Aunt Enids a brunette?" Laura queried.

"You was—were—a pretty kid, Enid, as I remember you. Plainly Esther was a reminiscent mood."

"You need to have some curl to gether with my stock, crop and implements. Farm open for inspection at any time. Apply on the premises to the owner to Wendall H. Lea, or J. A. Macdonald, 37 Pownall St. City.

NERVOUS AND RUN DOWN

Relieved by Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Cobourg, Ontario.—"For many years I have had troubles with my nerves and have been in a general run down condition for some time. I could not do my work half the time because of trouble every month. I was told of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound by friends and advised to try it. It has done me good and I strongly recommend it. Since I have taken it I have been able to do all my own work and I also know friends who have found it good. You can use these facts as a testimonial."

CLAIMS SHE IS THE CZARINA

BERLIN, Aug. 15.—A beautiful woman, accompanied by a boy and a young girl, arrived recently at the convent of the Ascension, Penza, 450 miles south-east of Moscow. The beautiful woman told the abbess that she was the Czarinia and had come with her son and the only one of her daughters who had escaped from the Bolsheviks for shelter. The imperial air of the woman left no doubt in the abbess's mind that she was speaking to the Empress of Russia, and she entertained the three for some weeks. The story that the Czarinia and the youthful Czar Alexis were there spread, and peasants for miles round arrived at the convent and begged to be allowed to kiss the hands of the imperial refugees. Then the Bolsheviks came, and the pretenders and the abbess were imprisoned. It was established that the beautiful woman was Claudia Polkarkovam and she and the girl who impersonated the Grand-Duchess have now been sentenced to death. The abbess has been sentenced to a long term of imprisonment.

awful romantic. Her mother had sentimental ideas, and named her out of a book. When we was mean when we were both kids we used to play real lively games, and End would shun up trees and go over fences—remember the day we tried to ride the red cow and you got thrown over the wall I laughed and nodded. Those days did seem dim and far off.

"And when we weren't playing wild when we got older End began reading—mostly fairy tales, you remember though you were getting into the 12 or 13. But you liked the romantic stories."

"Then I got married, and End seemed to grow up awful fast—I guess she had to work hard and that'll make any girl grow up fast. Anyway, after Jim and I moved here, and just before End came here to live, she seemed to grow up over night. I remember the first time Mark Upjohn saw you you was a kid, and the next visit you was growing up."

"I started a little Mark Upjohn I had forgotten him, I doubt whether I had thought of him for years."

Laura stopped peeling potatoes and started.

"Mark Upjohn! Related to the 'John's at Sanders Corners' she asked.

"Son of Hannah Upjohn and Mary Baxter out on the Turnpike and they lived in Henly Falls then. Hannah and Mary are both cousins of the Dwyers."

Esther had all the family genealogies of the neighborhood at her finger tips. And it was a complicated subject, for all the people around our way were related.

"Mark Upjohn!" Esther repeated. "He used to be crazy over End. She could have had him too, if she'd tried. He hasn't been round here for years."

To-morrow Plans

"When a mother detects from the writhings and fretting of a child that worms are troubling it, she can procure a reliable remedy in Miller's Worm Powders, which will expel all worms from the system. They may cause vomiting, but this may cause no anxiety, because it is but a manifestation of their thorough work. No worms can long exist where these powders are used."
