"I Was Terribly Weak After Baby Was Born"

Mrs. H. McClure, Newwood, Ont., writes:

"After my baby was born, I was terribly weak and run down, with pains across my back. I had heard so much of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food that I decided to try it. Three boxes proved enough to make me quite strong and well again. I also used Dr. Chase's Ointment for a rash which broke out on the baby, and the rash disappeared completely in a short time."

THE DAUGHTER JANE Chapter 9

Amy Talbot forgot her resentment next day, because for the first time in her life she received a telegram. A telegram was a social event at the village that lay near the farm, and unheard of on the farm itself.

To Mrs. Talbot it meant disaster. The yellow envelope meant nothing less than the death of Jane, or a severe accident. No one but Jane would send a wire! Young Amy cut short the anticipatory shivers of her mother by ripping open the envelope and announcing calmly:

"Jane's coming home tonight and evening train."

"She must be sick," Mrs. Talbot decided, still unable to free her mind from the feeling that a telegram must mean misfortune.

"How awfully old fashioned you are, mother," Amy exclaimed, still looking at the message, "I'm not looking at the message, I'm looking at this, by stirring again a little resentment, drove away all feeling of forboding."

That afternoon she remarked sentimentally, while she and her daughter were fixing the bed in Jane's old room:

"How nice to have all my ducklings around me again—you and Jane and Luther, just as you used to be."

"I don't think it will be much like it used to be," Amy answered over a plump pillow. "We're growing up, mother. You don't seem to realize that."

"Yes, it will be different." Her old face shadowed. Luther? Her wife now. He pays more attention to her than he ever did to his mother."

"Naturally," Amy put in. "And Jane went off to college. Your father said 'twas wicked, and I think maybe it isn't quite right myself."

"Mother! To have an education!"

"Well, not that—but for a woman to be a doctor, you have to know all about people's insides."

Amy giggled.

"Do you think that's wicked? After all, we have insides, and if they go wrong, someone has to know how to get them right again."

"Amy Talbot could only acquiesce before her child's logic."

"Yes, but some of them—well, it don't seem ladylike."

The fierce envy of her sister's chances suddenly took away her lighter mood.

"Ladylike! she scoffed. 'It isn't ladylike to scrub windows or weed gardens either. I wish you knew how much I wanted to study—any thing, people insides even, just so I could have a chance away from this rocky hole."

To this, almost daily, complained Mrs. Talbot had a form answer. She never thought about the complaint, or the intense longing behind it. The inevitable set of words popped out of her head just as they had yesterday and every day for years before.

"You get those ideas from the movies."

"I don't!" The protest was too hot to be overlooked. A perfectly woman's head.

"You get it from Claire, then."

To this Amy answered nothing. Claire had upset her, more than she dreamed. And she did not dare let her mother know it, so she kept silent. She could not tell that Claire had been an untruth.

Nevertheless, when this outburst was over, Mrs. Talbot relapsed into her former comfortable sentimentality. To a neighbor who dropped in she remarked:

"Yes, all my children around me again, a new one as well. Claire is such a comfort." For the instant she believed it, because she wanted to. "I'll be perfectly happy when Jane finds a good husband too, and gives up that work—and when Amy settles down."

Jane, she remembered with comfort, was the most sensible one of the family. Luther was hard worked and given to dreaming. Amy, in spite of her sudden passions, had a fund of hard common sense in her.

Jane arrived late, to the hot biscuit, cold ham and tea supper, and the mother found to her joy that nothing was the matter at all. Jane, hearing her brother was home, had simply chosen this opportunity for meeting his wife. Jane was studying medicine in Baltimore.

She was a great contrast to Claire, thought the mother as she side by the table. Jane had her father's flashing dark brown eyes, and rather light brown hair, inclined to limpness and an unkempt appearance. She had a long nose, a small mouth with thin lips, a firm chin, an intellectual forehead. She had a way of holding her head that showed off the fire within her—eagerness, passion, intelligence, earnestness.

Jane was pretty, in an odd way, and ashamed of her prettiness. Rocks and shoals might be ahead of her, but whatever her life was, it would be interesting. Even the mother saw that.

EXCRUCIATING PAINS, CRAMPS

Entirely Remedied by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Eberts, Ont.—"I started with cramps and bearing-down pains at the age of eleven years, and I would get so nervous I could hardly stay in bed, and had such pains that I would scream, and my mother would call the doctor to give me something to take. At eighteen I married, and I have four healthy children, but I still have pains in my right side. I am a farmer's wife with more work than I am able to do. I have taken three bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I feel that it is helping me every day. My sister-in-law, who has been taking your medicine for some time and uses your Sanative Wash, told me about it and I recommend it now, as I have received great relief from it."—Mrs. NELSON YOTT, R. R. 1, Eberts, Ont.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is a medicine for ailments common to women. It has been used for such troubles for nearly fifty years, and thousands of women have found relief as did Mrs. Yott, by taking this splendid medicine.

If you are suffering from irregular, painful times, nervousness, headache, backache or melancholia, you should at once begin to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. It is excellent to strengthen the system and help to perform its functions with ease and regularity.
