DICK PROVES HIS COURAGE

Chapter 36

There is an old saying that "it is a long lane that has no turning," but with us the turn had come although the way had seemed hard and long at times. I have not told of the many heart-burnings, the despair that held me often when I thought of what Dick had been about to do the day I found him with that pistol in his hand. The fear that, unless things straightened out for him, he might repeat the attempt, and successfully, was so acute at times that I felt nauseated.

But now I had no such fear. Dick was once more "The Captain of his soul, the Master of his fate." He whistled about the house, he joked and was in many respects the same loving and lovable Dick I had married. Not that our experience had not left its impress—does not any upheaval of our moral system invariably do that? But it had not made Dick either sour or permanently unhappy. I never spoke of this to him but once. He said:

"How could I allow anything that has happened in the past to spoil your life, Nan? Yours and Junior's? And I know that if I did, I should be doing you both a wrong. But it isn't all that, dear. I am happy now. I can't help but think of what we went through, cannot quite obliterate the memory of our blunders, our wicked actions. Yet we have come back, Nan. And this time we will cherish our happiness, be careful that we do not sin again. Junior must love us, Nan, respect us."

At times it seems that when things are brightest, our hopes are highest, something invariably happens. Something untoward.

So it was now with us. Our last debt had been paid. We had commenced to talk of buying a lot and building a home. Both of us liked Lansing, and had decided to remain there. Mother was delighted. It had been her advice that had brought us near her, and that we had been so contented, so happy, pleased her immensely. We had been talking together of our plan for a home with a shop detached, but on the same ground, as I had a very flourishing little business now, with three helpers when we heard the clang of the fire engine. This in a small town where the force is usually made up of a few men, was a very dangerous thing, always far more dangerous than in the big cities with their well organized departments.

Dick hurried out, while I watched from the windows. The fire was in a poor quarter of the town, old wooden tenement-like houses, which burned rapidly.

We had a maid to help in the house now so that I might give more time to my business, so I left her with Junior and also went to the fire. I felt unaccountably nervous, although there was no possible danger to us, as the fire was quite a ways distant, and the wind also carried it away from us.

They were taking the people down ladders when I arrived, the citizens working with the firemen in the rescue work. I looked around for Dick but could find no trace of him. This did not worry me at first as the entire town seemed to have turned out to watch the fire, and in the crowded street full of smoke it was almost impossible to distinguish faces.

I heard a familiar voice and turned to see one of the young men employed at the bank.

"Do you know where Mr. Williams is?" I asked. "He came over as soon as the fire broke out. I can't get through the crowd."

"I saw him a while ago. He was helping to take the women and children out."

"He wasn't going into the building?" My heart almost stopped beating as a burst of flame drove me back.

"Yes, but don't be frightened. I think they are all out now. He is probably over on the other side. I'll go look for him if you will remain here."

"Do so, please! And tell him I am waiting."

But before the young man could turn I saw Dick. He was walking wet where the firemen had played the hose on him as he carried a child about Junior's age down the ladder, this I learned afterward, and so blackened with smoke that I scarcely knew him.

"Come right home, Dick, you'll have a terrible cold. I am afraid," I said as a chill in the air made me shiver.

"Don't worry, dear. A little wetting won't hurt me."

We stood a few moments watching the fire die down because there was nothing more to feed it, then went home. I rushed over Dick, made him a hot drink, et cetera. But he was very restless all night, and in the morning had cold, and a little fever.

He insisted upon going to the bank, laughing at my fears.

Tomorrow—Dick Has Pneumonia.

The Markets

MONTREAL, Feb. 14.—The receipts of butter for the week ending February 12th, 1921, were 1,765 packages, which show an increase of 29 packages as compared with the previous week, and an increase of 1,430 packages, with the same week last year, but the total receipts since May 1st, 1920, to date show a decrease of 61,616 packages as compared with the corresponding period last year.

A steady feeling has prevailed in the market throughout the week and prices have not been important changes. The demand from local and outside buyers for round lots has not been quite up to expectations and the movement has not been so large as the previous week, but on the whole a fair trade was done in finest grass made creamery at 54c to 55c per lb., finest fresh-made goods at 49c to 50c.

The receipts of cheese for the week ending February 12th, 1921, were 282 boxes, which show an increase of 7 boxes with total receipts since May 1st, 1920, to date show a decrease of 133,151 boxes as compared with the same period last year.

There is nothing new to report in connection with this market. Stocks on the market at present are very light, they having been reduced considerably within the past two weeks by shipments made to Europe, and in consequence the all the week, as the price of fancy table stock has been at the lowest point in years. Local and outside demand has been light. At present prices producers are reluctant to dispose of their holdings, although it is generally known that there are still a great many potatoes on hand and that no immediate market improvement seems to be expected among the best informed interests.

HOULTON, Me., Feb. 16.—Prices in Houlton are $1.10 for Cobblers, $1.25 for Green Mountain. In country reports prices reversed as they have a better demand for Cobblers for seed. Receipts continue extremely light at all points. There has been no life in the potato market feeling is very firm for what few lots are still available. Prices are unchanged with finest western colored quoted at 28c to 28-2 per lb., finest eastern white at 27-2c, and finest eastern white at 27 to 27-2c.

1921 EXPANSION YEAR

That new construction to a value of $300,000,000 will be undertaken in Canada during 1921 is the prediction of MacLean Building Reports Limited. Exhaustive reports received from the Company's agents throughout the Dominion indicate that building operations for this year will be the largest since the record year of 1912.

There is every reason to believe that building costs will come down before the opening of Spring and should this occur the erection of residences will be proceeded with at a pace not witnessed heretofore. Rents have about reached the peak, but our cities are so congested that without further influx of population hundreds of homes will find ready buyers if marketed at reasonable figures. Builders believe that they will be granted loans under better terms than have prevailed during the past few seasons.

It is estimated that $55,000,000 will be expended during 1921 on new construction in Western Canada, $120,000,000 in Ontario, $70,000,000 in Quebec and $25,000,000 in the Maritime Provinces.

LONDON, Feb. 15.—The Prince of Wales has received Judge Patterson, captain of the Canadian curlers, and accepted the team's badge as a memento of the occasion.

The Canadian curlers will deposit a wreath on the cenotaph in Whitehall in memory of the curlers of the Empire, and will go to France, where they will visit the Canadian battlefields and cemeteries.

Lord Beaverbrook entertained the curlers last evening, the company including the Lord Chancellor, Mr. Bonar Law, and Sir George Perley, Canadian High Commissioner.

Jack Kearns, Dempsey's manager made this announcement during a visit here today. He said he was in touch with European promoters and dates for the champion's ap-himself wired him from Salt Lake City today, he said, that he was ready to start training at once with the idea of sailing in two weeks. Kearns said the sailing would be from New York about March 1.

How many beds in your home really invite sleep

CONSIDERING how the average bed is selected—it is a wonder people sleep so well as they do.

There is the bed bought to "match" the rest of the furniture.

And the bed that "has always been in the family."

And the metal bed bought for its sanitary quality—or because "a cheap bed will do for the children."

Never a thought about sleep. So there are many people who never get wholly relaxed. Always just a little disturbed by rattle, creak or feeling of unrestedness. Never completely rested.
