WERE HOPES FULFILLED

Did you ever stand in the sunset blaze
And think of the things afar,
And dream of the good things that might have been
Instead of the things that are.

That the world might be ruled by love and smiles
Instead of the stinging rod;
That the murderer who waits in the death house now
Might have sat by the throne of God.

That this sun might set on a peaceful world
Without the pain and the tears of war
And hearts could be happy and full of love
That tonight are broken and sore.

The loving vows that are memories now,
And the rings that are worn in vain;
The unfilled places in homes tonight
Where there might be joy no pain.

The orphan children that mothers bore
With faith in the way of God.
He who should hold them close to his heart,
Now sleeps beneath foreign sod.

The unkind things that are done each day
Might well be left undone,
And the world could be a much better place
At the setting of this sun.

FEMININE CHARMS ON POLICE FORCE

GUELPH, Ont., June 5 — (CP) — Since 1943 when Police Chief Harold Nash made the decision to employ women in the Guelph force life in police circles in this city has had its brighter aspects.

The shadow of the law doesn't dim the feminine charms of the policewomen. Uniforms are chic and wearable in two-tone blue with smart leather purses at the side.

"We feel as well dressed as any woman in town," declared Mrs. Dorothy Colley, whose husband has just been discharged from the R. C. A. F.

"I took the job because I wanted something to keep me busy," she continued. "Police work sounded unusual and I haven't been disappointed."

Guelph's police girls act as curfew monitors, keep radio contact with two police cars and work in shifts day and night. Odd hours are their only complaint.

"Women are as good and in some respects better constables than men," says the Chief. "They are industrious willing to learn and patient. We don't expect them to direct traffic or patrol beats although emergencies may arise. Their great service is close to the station. They apply the women's touch to sordid crime."

The women's touch may have softened up the male vocabulary around the station, Chief Nash thinks. "Since the girls joined the force none of the boys cuss any more."

PRESIDENTIAL CHINA SPECIALLY DESIGNED

WASHINGTON, Jan. 5 — (CP) — The White House silver, like many White House customs, is handed down from one chief executive to another.

Not so the china used for state occasions.

Many a President has ordered his own set, from cocktail cup to pie plate.

Franklin D. Roosevelt even drew the design for the china used in his administration. Woodrow Wilson was the first President to obtain china designed by an American artist, made from American clay at an American pottery, burned at American kilns and decorated by American workmen.

It was made at Walter Scott Lenox's pottery at Trenton, N. J. The service now is in the White House collection of Presidential china, kept in a room at the foot of the stairway of the White House's main corridor. It is in two tints of ivory, with the decorations in rolled gold.

The Roosevelt china, 1,722 pieces, is decorated with a narrow band of cobalt blue studded with gold stars. The blue band lies between a narrow outer gold band and an inner gold band in scroll and feather design. The President's seal appears on each piece.

TORONTO, June 5 — (CP) — Progress in physiotherapy technique advances under war conditions, says Lieut. M. Elsie Walt, Royal Canadian Army Medical Corps, on leave at her home here after service overseas.

"Psysiotherapy treatment has progressed by going much more into the idea of rehabilitation with emphasis on what the individual can do for himself rather than what others can do for him," says Lieut. Wait, who was at the No. 1 Canadian Convalescent Depot three months, until the Canadians left Italy.

The depot she describes as "a reconditioning centre which was the last stage of convalescence for men returning to their units at the front." When men were found too ill to keep pace with the routine there they were sent back to hospital for reallocation and sometimes a trip to hospital in England.

With one other physiotherapist, Lieut. Wait supervised the program in charge of physical training instructors. The exercises, performed mostly in groups, were designed to suit different types of fractures and shrapnel injuries.

"There was no need for nursing sisters and the men wore khaki instead of hospital blues," recalls Lieut. Wait.

Before enlisting in the R. C. A. M. C. in 1941, this University of Toronto graduate was on the staff of the Victoria Hospital at London, Ont. Following her leave at home, Lieut. Wait expects to be posted at Debert, N.S.

SUGAR AND EXPLOSIVES

Sugar, transformed into industrial alcohol, is used extensively in the manufacture of explosives.

DRIED OUT

If the family has gone on a bread holiday, resulting in a lot of stale bread in the bread box, the bread certainly does not need to be wasted . . . but do move quickly before mildew gets on the scene. Dry slices and crusts can be ground up to use in meat loaf toppings, etc. Larger nubs and pieces of loaves can be sliced and used as Melba toast, French toast or French toasted cheese sandwiches. The nice thing about the toasts is that they make a substantial lunch or breakfast and use up a fine lot of the stale bread.
