Pre-Remembrance Day Sermon At St. Paul's

The text of an inspiring sermon delivered by the Rev. J. T. Tibbott at St. Paul's Church, last Sunday, preceding Remembrance Day, follows:

"What know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost which is in you, which ye have of God, and ye are not your own?"

"For ye are bought with a price"—1 Cor. 6:19-20.

This is the Sunday immediately preceding Remembrance Day, and though many of you may participate in Remembrance Day ceremonies of one sort or another, yet the day is, or should be considered most worthy of special recognition by all Christian Churches and Christian people, and surely some preparation for the observing of this day of remembrance is not amiss.

In the words of my text, St. Paul, the Apostle is voicing surprise that some of the members of the Christian Church in Corinth had evidently already forgotten or had overlooked the truth that, as he says, "Ye are bought with a price."

The price paid for man's salvation, was the death of Christ. Everything the Corinthian Christians enjoyed, their fellowship together, their Church... all of their manifold spiritual blessings were theirs to enjoy, because "They were bought with a price."

And so this Sunday evening as we approach our national day of remembrance, along with peoples of other nations who have fought and helped maintain our heritage, let us not be unmindful of this truth—"That we are bought with a price."

Appreciating the truth that all of our blessings come to us through Christ, yet we are also conscious of human agencies to bring to us, and to preserve for us, the blessings which are ours to enjoy.

Therefore let us give some thought to the truth that, "We have been bought with a price," by those who in Christ's name, and in the endeavour to safeguard the Christian civilization of ours, have sacrificed their lives through the shedding of their blood.

Charles Kingsley in his "Letters and Memories" writes concerning war:

"The only comfort I can see in the tragedy of war is that they bring to all face to face with the realities of human life, as it has been in all ages, giving us sterner and yet more loving, more human, and more divine thoughts than we are able to find in our own hearts, and the fate of those who are gone, and awakening us out of the luxurious, frivolous, and unreal dream, in which we have been living so long, to trust in a living Father who is really and practically governing this world and all worlds, and who will that none should perish."

As I read this statement of Kingsley's it suggested to me several thoughts to which I think we ought to give consideration as we approach Remembrance Day.

The first thought presents itself in the words, "Giving us sterner, and yet more loving, more human, and more divine thoughts about ourselves."

Surely, when we come to give thought to the truth of War, the tremendous cost in service, suffering, and sacrifice, we see behind it all the love of others for us.

Is that not one of the stern facts of war?

We are bought with the price of the lives of those who loved us, better than they loved their own lives.

Is it not here where we see the greatest—the finest type of human love?

Can any love—divine or human, be greater than this? This truth bears the divine stamp of Jesus himself who said: "Greater love hath no man than this: that a man lay down his life for his friends."

You see then, that this note which I sound every Remembrance Day ought not to be considered just as a bit of pretty sentiment—BUT something which will stir us to remember what our privilege to live, and to enjoy the blessings which are ours in life, has cost others.

Yes—is it not too true—that this Remembrance Day, as on many a former such day—there will be many who will give little thought to the truth that "They are bought with a price?"

For all too many November 11th, Remembrance Day, is just another holiday, perhaps made a bit more spectacular than some others by martial parades and ceremonies, but even these do not stir them to any deep sense of appreciation of the true purpose and intent of this day.

How desperately, tragically, and morally callous of heart.

One of the most debasing of human sins is the sin of unappreciativeness.

It is because so many fail to appreciate the cost of life's blessings, that we find human society in the state of chaos in which it is today.

We snatch as it were our blessings from God and our fellows, and seldom think of the cost, or their real worth.

Let us not take time off to be thankful, for thankfulness is not something expressed simply in words, (and even here we fail), but thankfulness is best expressed in that true appreciation of life's values incorporated into better living.

I often wonder if those, who lacking in appreciation of the supreme sacrifice others have made for them, ever really think of the pain and heartache they must give to those who have shared in that supreme sacrifice made—the parents and loved ones of those who died.

Do you ever think of what thoughts, what anguish must find a place in the hearts of those who in two world wars have lost loved ones when they see so many today so apparently heedless on the road towards another world war, which might bring to them added suffering and sacrifice?

Sometimes in one of our old hymns we sing:

"Before our Father's Throne, We pour our ardent prayers; Our fears, our hopes, our aims are one, Our comforts and our cares..."

We share each other's woes, Each other's burdens bear; And often for each other flows, The sympathizing tear...

The truth is that countless thousands who ought to share each other's woes, and help bear their burdens, and truly sympathize with others, don't care a snap of the finger for others, and no where is it more marked than in our failure to remember that, "We have been bought with a price"—a price which cost the lives of loved ones of those all around us.

And that leads me to my second thought as found in the lines of Charles Kingsley—"Our Business Here"

"Surely the tragedies of war ought to remind us of 'Our Business Here'."

What is our "Business Here?" How often it has been expressed in the words of Colonel John McCrae, written in 1915, but made doubly more challenging to us because of the added sacrifice of those who died in the Second World War:

"In Flanders fields the poppies grow, Between the crosses, row on row, That mark our place; And in the sky The larks, still bravely singing, Scarce heard amid the guns below.

We are the dead. Short days ago We lived, felt dawn, saw sunset glow, Loved and were loved, and now we lie In Flanders fields..."

Take up our quarrel with the foe To you from falling hands we throw The Torch—be yours to hold it high. If ye break faith with us who die We shall not sleep, though poppies grow In Flanders fields..."

Perhaps some of you older members, old enough to remember the First World War, have almost forgotten those lines.

Most of the world forgot them—this was why we had a Second World War. Most of the world broke faith with those who handed on the Torch.

We let the Torch grow dim, then go out.

The same challenge comes to us today:

"Take up our quarrel with the foe To you from falling hands we throw The Torch—be yours to hold it high..."

There is our Business Today, and every day—the business handed on to us by those who bought us with a price.

Their quarrel with the foe was not just a quarrel against one nation, but rather against the evils which make war possible, against all the evils which spoil and hurt human society.

And the Torch they handed on to us, is the Torch of Christian faith.

Let us not forget it.

What then are we making our business today?

Are you personally engaged in this business, or leaving it to others?

And another thought—The tragedies of war should be used as Kingsley's words again: "Awaken us out of the luxurious, frivolous and unreal dream in which we have been living so long, to trust in a living Father, who is really and practically governing this world and all worlds, and who will that none should perish."

Is it not true that generally speaking no peoples in all world history have been living so luxuriously, so frivolously, as have the peoples of this continent, especially since the end of World War Two?

Never has more money been spent on pleasure, all forms of it. Race tracks, pleasure resorts, amusement establishments, have had record years. Never was so much money spent in alcoholic beverages and other so called "things delightful to some."

Never was the general standard of living higher than during the past few years in spite of increasing costs.

And how many too, in this higher standard of living so far as material things are concerned, have lowered their standard of living morally and spiritually.

Yes, we need to be awakened to a deeper sense of honour.

Too much about our lives today is dishonouring to those who bought us with a price.

Too much about our way of life today is dishonouring to a living

Father who through us would lead the peoples of this world into the Better World for which others have died.

We need to remember again and again that God is a living God—Yes, we need to remember—God is not mocked.

"For whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap."

If in this world of ours we have not yet learned to respect and honour Him and His purposes for mankind, then we shall be destroyed and others more worthy of the trust God has given to us, will be given the task.

Those who through carelessness, indifference, or willfulness seek to frustrate God's plans for this world must remember that God reigns, God rules. His purposes will be carried out, if not by us, by others.

Here is something to remember on Remembrance Day.

As the Nations which the Lord destroyed before your face, so shall ye perish, because ye would not be obedient unto the voice of the Lord, your God."

And to you who are conscious of the truth "That we are really bought with a price"—To you who believe in a living God and are earnestly seeking to help Him fulfill His purposes, I leave these lines written by Owen Seaman.

"Ye that have faith to look with fearless eyes Beyond the tragedy of a world at strife And know that out of death and night shall rise Rejoice, whatever anguish rend the heart, That God has given you the priceless power To live in these great times and have your part In freedom's crowning hour, That ye may tell your sons who see the light High in the heavens, their heritage to the nations, that I saw the powers of darkness take their flight I saw the morning break."

Growing Interest In Immigration To Canada Reported

MONTREAL, Nov. 12—Encouraged by an increased movement of immigrants to Canada during 1948 were reported here today by J. S. McGowan, director of colonization and agriculture, Canadian National Railways, who has returned from a tour of the United Kingdom and Western Europe.

Mr. McGowan said that by the end of this year, approximately 100,000 immigrants will have reached the Dominion from the British Isles, Holland, the displaced persons camps in Germany and other countries.

In these countries, said Mr. McGowan, "there is a growing interest in the opportunities that Canada has to offer and the promise of increased shipping accommodation should see an increase in immigration, next year."

"We are securing an excellent type of farming immigrant from Holland," Mr. McGowan said. "These immigrants are particularly well adapted for settlement in Canada, and present indications are that 1949 will see a considerable increase in the numbers immigrating here from that country."

Immigration from Denmark, Switzerland, Norway, Sweden and Belgium, while comparatively light at present, gives indication of increasing in the future, he reported.

There is no apparent lessening of interest in the British Isles, he said. "Since the end of the war, many people have moved to Canada from the United Kingdom and the number would have been greater if shipping facilities had been available."

Mr. McGowan said that the recent order of the Dominion Government permitting the free admission of immigrants from France has stimulated a new interest on the part of prospective immigrants in that country. He reported that many inquiries are being received from French families planning to come to Canada for farm settlement.
