(CHAPTER II.—Continued.)

"What do they file their saws for?" I inquired.

"Well, ye know," said he, "where they live the timber's thick and they hev hard work clearing 't 'makin' a home."

I was getting too sleepy for further talk. He made his way from field to field, stopping sometimes to look off at the distant mountains and then at the sky or to whack the dry stalks of mullein with his cane.

"I could hear the fire crackling and smell the odor of steaming tea."

"Ye fopped round like a fish in that basket," said Uncle Eb. "Guess ye must 'a' been dreamin' o' bears. Jumped so ye scairt me. Didn't know but I had a will 'ent on my shoulders."

Uncle Eb had taken a fish line out of his pocket and was tying it to a rude pole that he had cut and trimmed with his jackknife.

"I've found some crawfish here," he said, "an' I'm goin' 't try'er a bite on 't 'makin' 't rocks there."

"Goin' 't git some fish, Uncle Eb?" I inquired.

"Wouldn't say't; I was er wouldn't say't I wasn't," he answered. "Jes' go, in 't try'er."

Uncle Eb was always careful not to commit himself on a doubtful point. He had fixed his hook and sinker in a moment, and then we went out on a rocky point near by and threw off into the deep water. Suddenly Uncle Eb gave a jerk that brought a groan out of him and then let his hook go down again, his hands trembling, his face severe.

"By mighty! Uncle Eb," he muttered to himself, "I thought we hed him that time."

He jerked again presently, and then I could see a tug on the line that made me jump. A big fish came thrashing into the air in a minute. He tried to swing it ashore, but the pole bent, and the fish got a fresh hold of the water and took the end of the pole under.

Uncle Eb gave it a lift then that brought it ashore, and a good bit of water with it. I remember how the fish slapped me with its wet tail and sprinkled my face shaking itself between my boots. It was a big bass, and in a little while we had three of them.

Uncle Eb dressed them and laid them over the fire on a gridiron of green birch, salting them as they cooked. I remember they went with a fine relish, and the last of our eggs and bread and butter went with them.

Our breakfast over, Uncle Eb made me promise to stay with Fred and the basket while he went away to find a man who could row us across. In about an hour I heard a boat coming, and the dog and I went out on the point of rocks, where we saw Uncle Eb and another man heading for us, half over the cove. The bow bumped the rocks beneath us in a minute. Then the stranger dropped his oars and stood staring at me and the dog.

"Say, mister," said he presently, "can't go no further. There's a reward offered fer you an' t'et boy."

Uncle Eb called him aside and was talking to him a long time.

I never knew what was said, but they came at last and took us into the boat, and the stranger was very friendly.

When we had come near the landing on the "York state" side, I remember he gave us our bearings.

"Keep 't the woods," he said, "till you're out o' harm's way. Don't go near the stage-road fer awhile. Yell find a store a little way up the mountain. Git yer provisions there, an' about eighty rod further ye'll strike the trail. I'll take ye over the mountain north an' 't Paradise road. Then take the white church on yer right shoulder an' go straight west."

I would not have remembered it so well but for the fact that Uncle Eb wrote it all down in his account book, and that has helped me over many a slippery place in my memory of those events.

At the store we got some crackers and cheese, tea and coffee, dried beef and herring, a bit of honey and a loaf of bread that was sliced and buttered before it was done up. We were off in the woods by 9 o'clock, according to Uncle Eb's diary, and I remember the trail led us into thick brush, where I had to get out and walk a long way.

It was smooth underfoot, however, and at noon we came to a slash in the timber full of briars that were all glow with big blackberries. We filled our hats with them, and Uncle Eb found a spring, beside which we built a fire and had a memorable meal that made me glad of my hunger.

Then we spread the oiletho and lay down for another sleep. We could see the glow of the setting sun through the tree tops when we woke and began our packing.

"We'll hev 't hurry," said Uncle Eb.

Mr. A. N. FRASER, Provincial Manager, The Mutual Life Insurance Co. of New York, Charlottetown, P. E. I. May 20, 1905.

Dear Sir:—I acknowledge with thanks the receipt of your Company's cheque for $700.30 on Bank of Montreal, also Annuity Policy No. 11728 which provides—that on May 1, 1905 and each year for life, I will receive three hundred dollars ($300), in settlement of my Matured $5000, 15-year endowment, 15-year Distribution Policy No. 401,652 with Deferred Annuity, in THE MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE CO. of NEW YORK.

This I consider a splendid result, as to buy an Annuity of $300 at my age would cost $3,408, so that drawing $700.30 and getting an Annuity of $300, I am getting practically a cash value of $10,400.30. I also carry another policy in your company, in which I have all confidence.

Yours very truly, (Signed) SIMON W. CRABBE.

No Soot in the "Bison" Hot Water Heater

Soot is a non-conductor of heat. If soot coats the surface of a hot water heater, half the heat from the fire is lost, half the coal is wasted.

That is why some furnaces do not heat well, their flat surfaces and sections collect soot.

In the "Bison" hot water heater, there are no flat surfaces—there is no non-conducting blanket of soot—you get all the heat in the coal direct on the water surfaces and you get it quickly.
