DOROTHY DIX SAYS—

As I was walking down the street with my husband a man passed by and I said "hello" to him. It made my husband very angry. He told me I was always making a fool of myself by saying "hello" to a man, because a man should be the first to speak.

When we came home we quarrelled about it all night. Do you think I was wrong?

ANSWER: I think you would be very foolish to waste any more time on a man who does not seem to know his own mind from day to day. What a woman wants is security in marriage. A husband who sticks by her through thick and thin, not one who runs after another woman every time he gets peeved. Husbands, their best are hard enough to hold, and any woman who marries one who is emotionally unstable lets herself in for a lot of trouble.

DEAR MISS DIX: We have a store and I know very many people. As I was walking down the street with my husband a man passed by and I said "hello" to him. It made my husband very angry. He told me I was always making a fool of myself by saying "hello" to a man, because a man should be the first to speak.

When we came home we quarrelled about it all night. Do you think I was wrong?

ANSWER: According to the strict canons of etiquette a woman always speaks first to a man acquaintance because that is supposed to indicate whether she desires to keep up the acquaintance or not. But nowadays nobody bothers about such trifles, and it doesn't signify which one speaks first, the man or the woman.

HELEN'S DIARY

... trees at field-side. I recall him saying with obvious gratitude, and reverently: "I don't believe we ever have had a nice Thanksgiving Day like this one!"

And just for the moment we came next to inhale deeply of the fresh morning air, scented so exquisitely by the bracken and spruce of the neighboring woodlands. "It's lovely!" we agreed, feasting our eyes on the gold and scarlet, painted without pattern, but nevertheless most artistically across the face of the countryside, reacting in a panorama which might well be an artist's despair to far horizons, there to be kissed by the Summery blue of the sky. And then with a word of command to his horses—James—and Jamie, was off, and we stopped again to our picking. Only a few minutes ago the usual three horses drew the digger this season and if this might appear to be a slow way of opening out the rows, the pickers were never idle due to any lack of potatoes to be gathered. Indeed, in an abundance, they invariably stretched challengingly before us. Rob saw that a supply of empty baskets were always available to us, and as one of the men girls who were among our helpers presently discovered: "It's really no good hurrying to get one cart full, for then we have to start right away filling another!" True to their fond expectations, and even exceeding them, the men and the new barn cellar there at the other farm, an ideal place for the storing—easy of access and roomy, a worthy testimonial, written in stout lumber and concrete, to Mr. D. and his helpers' skill and perseverance.

And sometimes as the day wore towards noon—when my daily stint at the picking came to an end—Jamie's young legs grew weary of following his grand-father. Then he left his chore of tending to safety any tuber that had been in danger of being buried in the succeeding passage of the digger, and soon the echo of his merry laugh and Mutt's excited and encouraged bark from the neighboring woodlands told me that the two had traced a squirrel, they doubtless having interrupted his plans for assembling a winter store. One morning, Jamie and I ourselves had gathered handfuls of rare acorns from the lofty old oak on the lawn up the rise; apples too from the orchard nearby and always when we were there, spurning a drinking-cup, we followed flat on the good old earth and leaning above it, drank from the freshness of the spring, which bubbled forth clear and ever new from a cleft of rock not far from an end of the potato rows. From there in beguiling windings, and amid cress adorned depths it ran with small musical ripples to join the mill stream. If each of our days appeared to be busier than the preceding one the digging, accomplished in record time this year, was an altogether delightful period for the family at Alderlea.

Today, the continued fair and lovely weather, found the men at the first of the Fall potato grading, and also with a sound which doubtless was music to their ears, considering certain expenditures in connection with the growing of seed, saw the first truck load of the graded product roll away on the first lap of its journey to the world's markets—from some stored in the versatile garage at Rob's. And now that the end of day has tucked every bird and beast about the place to sleep—except Pard, and, I suspect, Tabby, the kitchen door opens softly to admit two men, who bring with them the freshness of the outdoors. "Hello!" James says, and Jamie smiles shyly still sitting—I see!

THE BANK OF MONTREAL BUSINESS SUMMARY for October says wholesale and retail trade in the Maritimes continues at a high level, but increased retail sales over last year reflect higher prices rather than increased physical turnover. Shortages still exist in many lines of merchandise. Collections are good. Domestic demand for lumber continues good. Contracts for delivery of pit props to Great Britain for the season 1947-48 are still pending, creating some hesitancy in regard to current woods operations. Potato digging in New Brunswick is progressing satisfactorily; an average crop is expected. Demand for dried fish is strong. The fresh fish market shows some improvement and prices have firmed. Manufacturing plants are well employed. A shortage of female labour is reported. Shipyards continue reasonably active. Coal production in Cape Breton during September was higher than in both the previous month and the same month last year.

THE KIRK PULPIT

Preaching yesterday morning, the Minister, the Rev. T.H.B. Somers, said: The Word of God is also contained in the authentic utterance of the inspired individual. The inspired utterance of the individual is limited by the divine sovereignty. "Thus saith the Lord" is handling the utterance of the Infinite and the Eternal. Such a prophet begins, as George Adam Smith says all prophets do, with the proclamation of the sovereignty of God — the great truth, which Calvin made the basis, often misrepresented by modern pens, of his message to the world. No message is more needed, partly because mankind has forgotten the firm and inevitable grip of the Divine government, and its inexorable insistence not only that grapes shall not grow on thorns, but that sin shall have its due and unfulfilling punishment. The world would not be where it is now, were it not for the fact that so many people have ceased to believe in the wrath of God, or in the impossibility of dodging consequences. Of course, the divine sovereignty is limited by the divine nature. God is limited by His own righteousness and love. There are things which kings have done, even within living memory, which his gracious Majesty, George VI, could not do simply because he is one of the most religious and high-minded men that ever sat upon a throne. In the same way, Eternal Right and Infinite Love—and by "love" I do not mean mere sympathy, but the love which is the best for the beloved, whatever the pain involved—are limited in their use of power just because they are what they are in God. Now religious "revival" of which some people speak so glibly, means the recovery of the sense of God's sovereignty, of our obligation to obedience, and thus of repentance. "Repentance" according to the Greek word in the New Testament is just a "transformation of mentality." We grow arrogant to dependence, from a humanism which is self-sufficient and conceited to a humanism that knows we were made in the image of God. We cease to think of love as soft and weak and realize it to be firm and strong and that God's love for us may mean, and usually does, that we go through dark places and hard fights to the mastery of our souls. The meeting of the blast and the tempest that we become brave and victorious, that we are deprived in order that we may strive. "Love," said poor Oscar Wilde in prison, "is a sacrament, that we are exposed to the words, 'Domine, non sum dignus.' 'Lord, I am not worthy,' ever upon the lips." Of no love is that true, than of this stern ethical, yet tender, and selfless love of God. It is the mighty "Thus saith the Lord" of all the prophets of history. It is the "Word of God" that we dare not handle deceitfully.

MRS. ANITA SHERWOOD

(Ottawa Journal, Oct. 23)

The funeral of Mrs. Anita Sherwood, widow of Beverley Wilmont Sherwood, took place from the chapel of Hulse and Playfair funeral parlors on Tuesday at 2 p.m. Mrs. Sherwood, before her marriage, was Anita Lyle Toole, of Kars, King's County, N.B. After her marriage she moved to Ottawa where Mr. Sherwood was employed in the Auditor General's office, and at the time of his retirement was a chief accountant.

The service at the chapel was conducted by Rev. J. R. Urquhart, a friend of the family for many years, assisted by Rev. Stuart Iverson, of First Baptist Church, in which Mrs. Sherwood maintained her membership.

Many floral tributes testified to the esteem in which Mrs. Sherwood was held.

Entombment took place in the Mausoleum in Beechwood Cemetery.
