

"Obverse and Reverse"

There are two sides to almost everything.

- Two sides to a penny.
- The obverse and the reverse.
- Two sides to a ship. Port and starboard.
- Two sides to a road. Left and right.
- Two sides to a watch. Outside and inside.
- The outside for appearance and protection.

The inside contains the movement which gives the time—truthfully or otherwise.

Truth, in a very attractive form, comes in our No. 832004 "Extra Thin Model" watch, 17 jewels adjusted—a gentleman's watch at a sensible price.

"Guaranteed of course"

JUST BETWEEN OURSELVES

BY DELLA E. STEWART

Don't you enjoy a spirited discussion occasionally? all in good spirit, of course, but over some subject where opinion can always be divided and where there are plenty of arguments on both sides. Nothing is more stimulating to the intellect, or amusing—if one has a sense of humor and can give and take freely.

Some time, when such a discussion is desired, try the subject of women's clothing.

Shall we have a standardized costume for all occasions, just as men do?

Is it worth while, now that women have so many outlets for time and thought and effort, to spend so many hours in the small details of costuming?

Or do women exert more influence if they are always becomingly gowned in the best of which they are capable?

How much time and money should go to the making of the wardrobe?

Are ready-made clothes as practical as those made by the modiste? Do we mind seeing another with a gown exactly like our own on the street?

Of course, we must go to the discussion with open minds. We can't expect to prove or disprove anything in one discussion, or, indeed, in many. Clothing has always been a favorite interest of femininity—it always will be. But we can gain much illumination on the subject as different women study and decide it—and we may gain new ideas.

Of course, it will not do to study the matter of dress just from the standpoint of form-covering—or revealing. What would the business of the country be without the incentive of woman's demand for novelty of texture and shade and garment?

Think of all the different workmen and artisans employed in supplying needs and desires, in producing new designs of beauty and comfort.

It's a broad subject.

"I reckon Jake didn't know," he said, loyally. But as he opened the door and threw the mixture, still burning outside, he said:

"I guess I won't take much stock in cough medicine after this unless I know who mixed it up."

And the little daughter squeezed his arm as she said: "I really think its safer, don't you, Dad?"

The German Zeppelin firm intends to transfer its works from Germany to the United States, it has been learned in Paris through a wireless message sent out from Germany. Under the treaty the manufacture of aircraft of all kinds is so restricted that the Zeppelin factory had been left a standstill. The plan is now to transfer the whole manufacturing plant to the United States and there perfect and build airships capable of making regular journeys across the Atlantic. It is understood that financial interests in America are concerned in the undertaking, but no details are forthcoming here.

Doctor—Well, how are you today? Patient—I think I'm somewhat improved. My inheritors are looking glum and dissatisfied today.

"This here is affixed good stuff," said her father. "Jake Hines, over on the back farm, got it from a man he knew." But the daughter backed away, waving the bottle and spoon aside.

"Oh, Dad, it's a shame to take stuff like that. You don't know what it is. Perhaps its horse medicine, or there may be alcohol in it," she added, knowing her father's antipathy to alcohol.

There was a twinkle in her eyes as she spoke, but it escaped her father.

"Jake knows better than to palm off any old liquor on me," said her father. Then his face lengthened a little.

Jake's Medicine Tested

"Come to think on it, that thar medicine was all powerful strong," he mused. "Used to burn good and hot going down, but it cured my cold. I was coughin' bad a spell back," he added, apologetically. His daughter had suggested something.

And the old farmer was a keen thirster after knowledge.

"Put the stuff in a pail, Dad. If it burns, you'll believe there's alcohol in it, won't you?" said his daughter, eagerly.

As the medicine went into a tin pail and her father struck a match the girl drew back. Her father would be very angry if he thought she had been teasing him all the time. And after all, she had no reason to suspect the mixture. Except that she thoroughly disapproved of patent medicine mixtures.

It Burned, True to Form

But, true to form, the liquid blazed up, in long blue flames. The farmer's brow clouded and he scowled.
