

RHEUMATISM FOR OVER 16 YEARS No Return Of The Trouble Since Taking "Fruit-a-tives" I was a great sufferer from Rheumatism for over 16 years. I consulted specialists; took medicine; used lotions; but nothing did me good. Then I began to use "Fruit-a-tives" and in 15 days the pain was easier and the Rheumatism much better. Gradually, "Fruit-a-tives" overcame my Rheumatism; and now, for five years, I have had no return of the trouble. I cordially recommend this fruit medicine to all sufferers.

EASTERN GUARDIAN EASTERN KING'S EXHIBITION will take place on Thursday October 6th instead of October 4th as previously reported. GEORGETOWN JOTTINGS BASEBALL - Georgetown has again come to the front in baseball circles by completely defeating the Murray River team; scoring 29 to seven. The game was played on the Murray River diamond on Saturday August 25th. From the start the game was very much one sided, Georgetown retaining the lead through all the innings. This is the seventh straight victory for the Georgetown boys this season. FESTIVAL A SUCCESS - The ice cream festival held in the Town Hall, Georgetown on Tuesday evening August 23rd under the auspices of the Ladies of Holy Trinity Church was a decided success. There was a large attendance. A short musical program was carried out in connection with the sale of ice cream. A considerable sum of money was realized.

Sea Currents To learn more of ocean currents and drifts, the Biological Survey of Canada in the summer of 1919 sent out 330 drift bottles in the Bay Fundy. Sixteen of these were picked up on the shores of the Gulf of Maine. Each contained a post card on which was written besides the address of the biological station, the offer of a reward to the finder, who wrote the time and place of finding and the drift card. Two sizes of bottles were used—two ounce and eight ounce, to the latter a galvanized iron drag was attached to hang at a depth of three fathoms, the object of the drag being to minimize the direct effect of the wind. Of the fifty five bottles with drags, three were picked up on the Cape Cod peninsula and three on the Maine coast. Seven of the bottles which reached the Cape Cod were found after an interval of between seven and thirty days. The direct distance between the Bay of Fundy and Cape Cod is 900 nautical miles. The drift of these bottles indicates a surface movement of the water from the Bay of Fundy through the northwestern part of the Gulf of Maine striking Cape Cod on August 29th 1919 drift bottles were set out off the coast of New Brunswick. One of them reached the Azores on August 8, 1920. From the position in which this bottle was found it is believed, says a bulletin of the Weather Bureau, that strong currents and drifts, that it approached the Azores from the north or northwest. Another bottle dropped only a mile from the first one and at about the same time was carried to the Cape Cod coast. It is presumed that the first bottle approached Cape Cod but being a little further east, was eventually caught by the Gulf Stream and carried to the Azores. Still a third was put out at the same time about six miles northeast of that which went to the Azores. It was picked up on one of the northwestern islands of the Orkney group on January 21, 1921. According to the Toronto Daily Star, Nov. 1, 1920, a sealed bottle cast into the ocean near Newfoundland in September 1919 reached Nieuport, Belgium, in August 1920. A striking case of drift cited is that of the derelict schooner Fannie E. Wolston, which was adrift for two and a half years and was observed more than thirty times. On December 15, 1891, she was seen northeast of Cape Hatteras and four times afterward on her way across the Atlantic. After reaching the Azores she circled the Sargasso Sea and returned to the American coast by a southern route. The following account printed in the Washington Times of August 9, 1920 of the drift of one of the lifeboats of the ill fated Lusitania furnishes an interesting case of the action of ocean surface currents: "Scientists are greatly interested in the probable route followed by the Lusitania life belt recently picked up in the Delaware River off one of the city piers in the city of Philadelphia. They estimate it travelled from 12000 to 15000 miles and required more than five years in its journey. "The Lusitania was torpedoed off the Irish coast on May 7, 1915. Hydrographers figure that the belt went through the Irish Sea and around the north of Scotland; down through the North Sea and the English Channel; down the coast of France and Spain and Africa. There the current bore it across the Atlantic. Entering the Gulf Stream, it was carried north. It escaped from this current and drifted to the Delaware Capes. Probably the propeller of a steamer caught it up at the capes and brought it up the Delaware. When found afloat it was 100 miles up the river from the capes. "The life belt was covered with barnacles. When these were scraped off, the name of the Lusitania was found and easily deciphered." WHEN THE SEA BULGES—SUN AND MOON BOTH HAVE EFFECT ON THE OCEAN. The rise and fall of large bodies of water—a phenomenon to which we have applied the name of tides—is the result of the influence exerted upon the earth by the moon and the sun. Both pull or attract the earth in varying degrees, the power of the moon being about two and a quarter times as great as the sun. This attractive force is most evident in the fluid portion of the earth's surface. The pull of the moon, which is so effected that they bulge outward, forming a rising of the water on the side of the earth nearest the moon and also on the opposite side with corresponding low water between. The reason for extreme high tides at the times of the new and full moon is because the moon is then in a line with the sun and the water reacts to the combined pull of both bodies. At the time of the first and third quarters of the moon this influence is divided—the single unit pull of the sun acting at right angles to the two and a quarter unit pull of the moon, thus diminishing materially the attraction exerted upon the earth and producing tides that do not rise nearly as high as the ones occurring during the times of the full or new moon. As the moon appears to revolve about the earth once every twenty four hours and forty eight minutes two tidal waves continually sweep around beneath her, causing two high tides and two low tides in each approximate day. "This book tells you how to economize." "Do I need a book to tell me that?" "Huh?" "Economy is forced on me. I can't get away from it."

DAYLIGHT SAVING DEAD IN BRITAIN LONDON, Aug. 25.—British farmers have succeeded in killing the daylight saving measure. A bill making the system permanent was dropped out of the Government's program in the rush of legislation at the end of the session, and even the warmest advocates for the daylight hour of British Summer Time say that the scheme is dead in the face of united agricultural and nursery opposition. Mothers of large families, as well as dairymen, say they cannot care for their charges except on nature's schedule. AN AMIR IN LONDON. He Took His Wives to See "Chu Chin Chow." The Amir of Katsina, Nigeria, accompanied by two of the four wives permitted him by the Koran his fifteen-year-old son, and a body of Nigerian veterans to guard his honor, paid a state visit to London recently. On his way around the world to Mecca the monarch decided to stop in the British capital to offer his respects to the King and spend a busy week in sight-seeing. England, accustomed as she is to visits by foreign royalty, let nothing undue to keep the amir amused. He called at the Mansion House to see the Lord Mayor and sat, stately and dignified, in the Lord Mayor's chair. He went to see the zoo, the mini Bank of England and the Bank of West Africa. He expressed delight at the sight of the lions in captivity, at the zoo, adding solemnly: "Our forefathers were meat for his forefathers." The amir's wives were permitted to accompany him to "Chu Chin Chow," where, hooded and veiled, they occupied a box in full view of the audience. They spent the rest of the week in the harem at the Midland Hotel, St. Pancras, where women visitors were received. Both princesses said that they admired Western women's clothes and hats, but were perfectly content with their turbans. The decision to take the wives to the theatre was a complete reversal of precedent on the amir's part. On the second day of his sojourn he exclaimed suddenly to G. W. Webster, a senior resident of the Nigeria, who is a member of the Mecca-bound party: "Why should I not let the women see the theatre? It is not forbidden by the laws of your country." Closed taxicabs were ordered to a private entrance of the hotel and the two women were whisked downtown in time for the first act. There could hardly be a greater contrast than that shown by the King of Spain and the Prince of Wales in their own balls when before the world, says the London Mail. Alfonso arrives at a ball with his moustaches flicked up high, his breast covered with orders, out to be the regular king. If he greets his English friends he does it in the English way, and calls a taxi-man (and he takes any number of taxis when in London, "Cabby," in the jolliest way. But does he congratulate a Spanish subject on winning in a tennis tournament, or dancing in a ballet? Why, then he is like Velasquez, stepping out of his frame, all kindly beams and salams—the first gentleman of Europe. The Prince of Wales plays up differently. He seems much less than his 27 summers. His deportment, naive way with old Service men, with foreigners and the girls he dances with delights them. He is so keen, by the way, on dancing that once he starts a waltz he does not stop. So the prince is learning a bit of Welsh. Very heroic of him. Why is he so entitled? Because, somewhere in the thirteenth century, Queen Eleanor of England gave birth to a prince while with the Prince of Wales, and the prince was humorously presented to the Welsh as a Prince of Wales, "because he could speak no English." The joke took with the Welsh, and the heir to the crown has been "Prince of Wales" ever since.

AN INNOCENT THIEF The celebration of the centenary of the birth of Flaubert the great French writer, author of "Madame Bovary" and "Salammbô" will take place on December 12th next. Anatole France, the greatest living French writer, tells an amusing story of Flaubert. A beautiful young artist set her heart upon winning the prize from the Academie Française, and year after year she succeeded. But on one occasion she forgot to compose her poem until the day on which it was to be sent. In despair she appealed to Flaubert to write two hundred lines on "Immortality" before midnight and she locked him in her library to complete the task. At 11.30 he had not written a line; then bestirring himself, he took down Lamartine's "Harmonies" from a shelf and copied out the necessary number of verses. Unaware of their true authorship, the lines were submitted by the actress to the Academie, who awarded her the prize and printed Lamartine's verses over the signature of Louise Collett. "It was a capital joke against the 'Immortals' but Flaubert never confessed his part in it until long afterwards.
