Workers Shut in Mill By Bull

(By Dominion News Service) BLACKBURN, (Lans), Jan. 28.—Something very like a Spanish bull fight took place here recently.

After chasing a runaway bull for half a hour, men ran it into a mill yard, and locked the gates.

Every time they tried to lasso the animal, however, it furiously charged them. Their efforts were watched by a large and excited crowd.

On man daringly attempted to kill the bull with a pickaxe, but he was driven to take cover behind a motor lorry.

After four hours' fight several cattle were turned into the yard as decoys, and the bull was lassoed and killed in the yard.

The mill employees who stayed to the midday meal were unable to cross the yard to the anteen, and had to obtain food from nearby houses.

Dark Red Snow

(By Dominion News Service) HALMSTAD, Sweden, Jan. 28.—An unusual natural phenomenon has been observed here. Snow had been falling steadily all day when it was suddenly noticed that the flakes were becoming tinged with a dark red colour.

A closer examination revealed that thousands of small and very thin worms were the cause of the strange colouring.

The worms, which varied in length from one to four inches, have also been reported as falling with the snow in another district.

Specimens have been collected and sent for scientific investigation.

Notes By the Way

merely sought homes in other haunts within our island coasts.

In a book treating of the New Psychology we read that a learned professor propounded to a large and intelligent class of students the question, Are a cow's ears above, below or behind the horns? He did this to test their faculty of perception. All of them had seen cows, but only two of the class would venture to answer and these two had studied drawing. The others had been seeing without perceiving it being true that Prince Edward Island has more cows to the square mile than any other Province of Canada, how many of our college students can correctly and promptly answer the professor's question?

It is not often that newspaper readers in this Province care particularly for what goes on in the Bow Street Police Court in London. But just now the case of Andrew Fraser Mitchell which is pending there has a very considerable interest for public men here and at Ottawa, for our federal and provincial governments and for many others on both sides of the ocean. The hearing begun on Saturday last and has been adjourned until Saturday next when it may be concluded. The result will be awaited with much interest here.

The change of government in England seems likely to present the over-sea Dominions receiving the trade preference agreed upon by the Imperial Conference and which was favored by the Baldwin Government. This is disappointing, the more so as the Liberal party over there is lending its support to the Labor Government in this matter. The political situation is not unlike that existing in Canada. Both in Canada and the United Kingdom the governments of the day are in a minority in their respective Houses of Commons, but are supported by another party in carrying out measures that are at best doubtful if not injurious.

Good butter is never a drug on the market.

Old English Fair

(By Dominion News Service) LONDON, Jan. 28.—Wickham Fair, which dates from 1268, when a charter was granted by Henry III, is in danger of abolition.

J. Carpenter Garnier, lord of the manor has applied to the Home Secretary for its discontinuance on the ground that cattle sales and business formerly transacted no longer take place, and that all which remains is revelry by the villagers.

From its inception the fair has been held in the fine square of this pretty Hampshire village, and the lord of the manor says he thinks festivities held each May could be now transferred to another spot.

The parochial electors have decided to protest to the Home Secretary against the proposal.
