

PROVINCE OF QUEBEC

An Islander Speaks of Summer Resorts.

THE COPPER MINES.

Sulphuric And Fertilizer Works a Strong Feature.

To anyone who has formed his opinion of the province of Quebec from his view of the part traversed by the C. P. R., a genuine and pleasant surprise is in store if he takes a trip through the Eastern Townships.

The eastern province will compare very favorably with the most fertile and productive portion of Canada and from the standpoint of picturesque scenery many parts are certainly not surpassed by any other spot on the continent.

Perhaps the most beautiful of the many summer resorts is North Hatley.

Situated on the beautiful Lake Massi-wippa and surrounded by high hills on all sides it reminds the visitor of the far famed Lake Lucerne district.

It is estimated that at least 1,000 tourists were last year attracted to this one resort by the natural beauty of the country.

At the end of this lake is situated the Presbyterian Church of which Mr. A. B. McLeod of Springton is pastor for the summer months.

Many GUARDIAN readers will perhaps be surprised to know that Quebec possesses some very valuable copper mines.

At Capelton and Eustis there are large and valuable copper mines and sulphuric and fertilizer works.

A trip through these mines and works will give the visitor a more just idea of the great resources of these justly famous eastern townships of Quebec.

SENTENCE PASSED ROBERTS.

Court in Utah Says He Must Pay $150 or Serve 150 Days in Jail for Polygamy.

Salt Lake, Utah, June 27.—Brigham H. Roberts, who a few months ago claimed a seat in the House of Representatives, on Saturday came for sentence under a conviction of polygamy.

Judge Norrell sentenced him to pay a fine of $150 or be imprisoned in the county jail for 150 days. Execution of the sentence was staid thirty days so as to give Roberts a chance to appeal. He still hopes to escape in the Supreme Court on a technicality.

When Roberts came up for sentence to-day his attorney, J. H. Moyle, made a plea for leniency, saying that his religious convictions had already deprived him of one of the most important offices in the gift of the State, to say nothing of its emoluments.

Roberts was asked later to make a statement.

"I made a statement at length on the merits of the case of the people of this country when my case was up in Washington," he said.

STILL A THIN LINE, BUT NOW OF MUD COLOR.

Hereafter there will be no thin red line. It will be a thin line of mud-color.

Working days, fighting, ordinary every days, the British soldier will be clothed in that ugly neutral tint that does not show itself against the rock or the burnt grass of the veldt in South Africa when there is a kopje to be carried. Khaki is the color in future.

The London Daily Mail claims it has the highest authority for stating that the uniform of the future will be khaki.—All arms—horse, foot and dragoons, artillery and army service, officer and private—they are all to wear the same monotonous, uninteresting color.

Never a war but leaves its impression on the details of army service. This war is to abolish the redcoat.

At the same time the army is not to lose its butterfly tints entirely. It would be a national calamity and a check to the recruiting sergeant's industry if the red broadcloth were to be wholly a vanishing quantity. The War Office realizes to the full value of a red splash of color in the black-coated crowd of a London street. So the soldiers costume is to have a two-fold existence. The red-coat is to emerge from his khaki chrysalis on Sundays and holidays and at any other time when he is intended to be a spectacle and not a working soldier, as, for instance, on dress parades.

The army is to have a full-dress uniform with red coats, more striking, more distinguished than his present red coat. It is to be much more finely frogged, much more fully tasselled, than ever a uniform was in the army's history. But, for commercial purposes—still the khaki.

A BILLYCOCK HAT.

Khaki also is to be the hat of the future, and, moreover, it is to be of a type unknown in history. No more nor less than a khaki billycock hat is the War Office answer to the disaster at Aldershot last week. Tommy in a billycock hat will be a feature of the London streets as soon as Lord Roberts has put an end to the South African campaign. Also the billycock is likely to carry with it a species of awning, carried on whalebone rafters and projecting from the novel helmet. That, of course, is only for field days and days of exposure to the sun. But when the new methods develop, it may be taken as certain that there will be no more field-days of fatalities.

COMMON SENSE AT LAST.

The present war in South Africa is showing the nearest approach the British army has ever made to rational dress in the field. It seems almost incredible in these days of easy and servicable khaki, for instance, that the Life Guards fought at Waterloo in scarlet coats, light blue overalls with gold stripes down the sides, and heavy brazen helmets of old Roman pattern, with a black bearskin crest and a red, yellow and blue "hackle feather."

Cuirasses, which are now only worn for show, were introduced some time after, being first worn at the coronation of King George the Fourth.

A huge bearskin cap—like that now worn by the footguards, but nearly twice as big—was introduced in the Household Cavalry in the reign of William IV. This was replaced by the present pattern of helmet in the early reign of Queen Victoria.

At last we have got to the realm of commonsense. In one particular we might with benefit copy the rifeman's uniform of a century ago. All the ribe crops at that date wore green—and it was often practically invisible to the foe.

Correct cut, faultless fit, fashionable fabrics—a Paton's spring suit to order combines all three. And more. The price will be not nearly so high as that you're asked to pay by so many exclusive tailors. We're now showing a very extensive line of the newest, best fabrics for spring suits—fancy chevrons, striped cash meres, tasteful chevrons. We'll make each suit that will satisfy in all respect choice of this excellent assortment, $15.00 $100 cloth, good imported tweed for $18. Paton & Co.—22 d&w.

An Excursion For May Flowers.

The following was read at the closing of West Kent school:

Many of the cold dreary schooldays of the winter of 1900 were spent in talking of the pleasure in store for the favored few, who, at the earliest possible season, were to take part in the annual raid on the Mayflowers. The Mayflower, known by three names, the Ground Laurel, Trailing Arbutus, and Mayflower, of which the last is the most common, so called from its appearance in that month, so highly prized for its sweet odor, beautiful color and form, and because of its being the earliest wild flower to bloom in our northern clime. Although it has the nature of a shrub, like a creeper it trails along the ground among mosses, herbage, and grasses so that unless one knows beforehand where to look they are not likely to find it. After many talks the day and hour on which we were to start on our search were decided. The long looked-for day came at last, all that we could wish, sun shining, hot enough for comfort, and with a deliciously cool breeze fanning our faces. Crossing from Prince St. to Southport wharf in the Hillsborough, we had a walk of about two miles before we would reach our destination. Mutch's woods, a place long famous for its Mayflowers. Once in the country and all restraint was thrown off. We ran, jumped, raced, played tag, squat tag, and every other kind of tag until we were tired out, and by that time we wished we had reserved our breath for our walk; however we plodded on, and no doubt the sight of that well filled basket, at which many sheep's glances were cast, helped many a one of us to continue on our way. Here and there along the sides of the road we could see chance Mayflowers like ones, that, having strayed away from their fellows were living a hermit's life, alone, using their span of life to cheer weary travellers on their way. Arrived at the skirts of the wood, we hunted for a suitable place in which to perform a very pleasant duty, that of eating our lunch. Finding a natural arbor formed by soft mosses under foot and boughs of birch and spruce interlaced overhead, we sat down or rather squatted to a merry meal. That finished, we started our search in real earnest. Some of the advanced of the party chanced to find beds long before the rest, but human-like sat there eagerly picking, too greedy to tell, or share with the others. It was not long, however, before all of us had before our longing eyes, more than we could pick to choose from. Having loded [everything] with the precious gems of nature, we once more started for our little green hut on the edge of the wood. There we finished the remainder of the basket, or rather what was in it, which I may say was very small, those who had it in charge, having helped themselves liberally. Then we set out for home and on our arrival walked up the Main Streets, each carrying, to the no small envy, if we could judge by looks of the passers by, a magnificent bouquet of May flowers.

More people have been cured of piles by using Dr. Chase's Ointment than by all other treatments combined. It never fails to cure piles.
