SUPREMACY OF BRITISH GLASSWARE

One direction in which Continental manufacture used to be regarded as not only supreme but unassailable was the production of the beakers, flasks, test-tubes, and other glassware used by chemists in their laboratories. "Jena glass," or example, was once claimed to be practically perfect, and this claim was so vigorously made and repeated that experimenters all over the world had reached the point of accepting it as a sort of blind faith. There was something the consternation in Great Britain and other countries when the war cut off all the Continental supplies of chemical glassware. It was thought impossible that any efficient substitute could be produced within many months. However, remarkable results were, however, achieved when the problem was tackled with British skill and thoroughness. Careful and impartial tests were first made to determine the exact qualities of Continental chemical glassware—its resistance to corrosion by strong chemicals, and so on. Similar tests were made with British glassware and proved that while the much vaunted Jena glass took a very low place, the first place was held by British glass. This result was attained by the British manufacturers in an astonishingly short space of time, and it represents a greater triumph than the layman can perhaps fully appreciate. In glass-making, Great Britain has also made conspicuous progress. Designers have been encouraged to leave the beaten track and produce effects which are as artistic as they are novel. One fascinating type of ware has been based on an adaptation of Egyptian mythological figures and hieroglyphics. The bold free outlines of Egyptian art lend themselves exceedingly well to reproduction in crystal glass, and the British designer has produced a series of models which are certain to be treasured by the connoisseur. Thus in both Science and Art British glass is taking the leading rank.

THE OUTLAW

The Story of a Girl Who Didn't Want to Marry

By ETHEL LLOYD PATT.

Chapter XLIII

So it came about that on the following Friday one of the directors a camera man, three members of the company, Mr. Dayton, president of the Champion Film Company, and myself went down to the seashore to take a one reel filler. Had I realized it, the extraordinary part of the situation was that the president of the company himself should be to go away for a week-end and personally supervise a comparatively unimportant film. However, I was too new in the work to give this situation its full value. I had been a quiet little person, intent upon learning all I could and improving myself. I had made a few friends around the Champion studios. I had exchanged little more than "good mornings" and "good nights" with the members of the company that went to the seashore with me now.

WOMAN'S LIFE WAS A BURDEN

Mrs. Clayton Was Miserable Till Health And Happiness Are Restored.

"If I could say just what is in my heart about Tanlac I know I could do a great deal of good to people who suffer as I used to," said Mrs. Robert Clayton, 25 Hanover St., St. John N. B., a life-long resident of the city. "For three or four years I had to live on a special light diet, but even then at times I had awful spells of indigestion. Nobody knew how I suffered. I got up in the mornings with an awful feeling of nausea, and as the day wore on I would get sicker and weaker and nearly always vomiting in the day would have to lie down for an hour or two. I was troubled a lot with pains in my shoulders, neck, and head and had terrible headaches at times. I was nervous, worried and miserable all the time, and life was a burden to me. My only regret about Tanlac is that I didn't know about it sooner. It brought me strength, health, and happiness. I had no finished the bottle before I could see a wonderful change and it was not long before I was like a different person, eating anything I wanted, never having a trace of indigestion and sleeping like a child at night. I got up in the morning now refreshed and happy and actually enjoy housework. Tanlac enabled me to enjoy life, and if I had my way I should put a bottle of this wonderful medicine in the hands of every sick person in St. John. Tanlac is sold in Charlottetown by Reddin Bros.

Sims' Charges Of Naval Delays

WASHINGTON, July 20.—A dramatic conflict of views between Republicans and Democrats, as to the justification for Rear Admiral Wm. S. Sims' charges of misdirection and delay on the part of the U. S. naval administration during the early months of the war, was shown in majority and minority reports, published today, of the Senate naval committee's investigation of the controversy between Admiral Sims and former Secretary Daniels.

Assailed by the majority for having pursued what is declared was a "self-defensive, non aggressive and non-helpful policy" during the early stages of the war, the naval administration under Secretary Daniels was upheld in minority report as "amply vindicated by the uniform success of our operations," and as deserving the "heartly commendation of this committee and of the people." With the lapse of more than a year since the conclusion of the naval sub-committee's inquiry, the publication of the reports constituted the closing chapter in the notorious Sims-Daniels controversy of May, 1920, precipitated by Rear Admiral Sims' letter, sharply criticizing the Daniels war administration. The letter, which charged numerous delays and derelictions in the navy department, was brought to light during a committee's inquiry into Admiral Sims' controversy with the former secretary over naval awards of distinguished service decorations. Charging many sins of omission and commission both in the matter of preparedness and in naval operations of the war, the majority report severely scored Mr. Daniels, former President Wilson and Rear Admiral Wm. S. Benson, former chief of operations, as the responsible administrative officers. The officials were warmly defended in the minority report in line with its opposite views in the controversy. Admiral Sims, the commander-in-chief of naval operations overseas during the war, was commended by the majority and assailed by the minority.

His Head Chopped Out Of Pier Piles As The Tide Rises

NEW YORK, July 20.—Max Rochester, who is fifteen now, probably will be telling when he is fifty the story of how his head, jammed in the piling on the beach off Ocean Parkway, Brooklyn, was chopped out with an axe. It took a good deal more than an hour to get Max free, and he will not forget to include among the details of the yarn how the tide was rising all the time the police and firemen were working over him, and how within another hour his head would have been submerged.

Coney Island station had difficulty in keeping back the big crowd that had gathered.

Dr. Horn of the Coney Island hospital examined Max and found that except for a few superficial abrasions he was unharmed. WILL TRY AGAIN TO RAISE ESPERANTO.
