The Double Act

A Romance of the Theatre BY MARION TOMLINSON

Rosemary bowed, unsmiling, and escaped when she could. She knew she had still the big scene in the third act, and must save herself for it. Anthony, unable to restrain himself, rushed round behind the scenes and caught her just as she was leaving the stage.

"You can, Father, if you'll come out with us to-night," answered his son. "He told me to ask if you and mother would come. I forgot to tell you. He's giving a party to his friends the Flynns in that box opposite. Will you come?"

taxi-loads of merry-makers drove through the streets of Bethnal Green. One of them was driven by the man, who had first taken Rosemary to Mrs. Hicks' lodging house. She had taken care to send for him at the address he had given her.

"What about it, Joe?" asked Anthony, leaning across to the silent youngster. Joe did not remove his bewildered eyes from Rosemary.

"E used ter talk like a toff sometimes, and 'e fought like a girl, an' now she's bof on 'em!" he said slowly.

Anthony laughed. "Give it up, old man," he advised. "The ways of women are beyond us men."

"Where's Les?" he demanded. "Don't let 'im get away. I got something to tell 'im."

"Unreasonable!" cried Rosemary contentedly. "You are difficult to please!"

"I loved your hair," said Anthony obstinately, "and I shall love it again. I'll get you keep it so only as long as Kinship runs and then I shall have my golden garden girl again. Shall I?"

"Unreasonable!" cried Rosemary contentedly. "You are difficult to please!"

THE SHAMROCK

Oh the dear little Shamrock! the sweet little Shamrock! The proud little Shamrock, I ween: For the nursing which bloomed through the dool of the years Now blossoms 'neath smile of a Queen!

"Though Queen of the mightiest empire Which earth has ever known I joy but in my peoples' joy Their sorrows are my own."

I have wept when the sun of my bright, summer hours In the glory of manhood went down; I have mourned and have missed the glad voices long stilled, More precious than pearls of my crown.

And shall I not mourn with those mourners who weep O'er the tomb of that glorious band Who have died for fair freedom, for country and Queen On the heights of the far-away land?

Oh ye daughters of Erin! light-hearted and true; Oh ye sons of the loyal and brave! I stoop from earth's grandeur to gather a wreath For my brave Irish soldiers' grave.

It shall be of the flower of the land of their love And green as its leaves shall their name Be enshrined in my heart, and the hearts of all those Who link Ireland with honour and fame.

Oh! bear it, all proudly, aloft on your crest; That the world of the future may know and rest andrest To the leal sons of Erin we owe."

Oh, the dead little Shamrock! the sweet little Shamrock! The proud little Shamrock, I ween, For the nursing which bloomed through the dool of the years Now blossoms 'neath smile of a Queen.

As a tribute to the exceeding valor of the Irish troops in South Africa, St. Patrick's Day was celebrated throughout the Empire. Shamrocks were brought to England by the car loads. The Irish flag was hoisted over the Mansion House, London; and by order of Her Majesty, the bell in the Tower of Windsor was rung, and all the soldiers of the Empire wore a bunch of Shamrocks in their helmets.—E. S. M. in Lays and Incident of the South African War.

EDUCATION PLUS LEGISLATION Education, to be effective, demands certain conditions, such as freedom from distractions, hence a measure of quietness. Where the aim of education is the cultivation of moral habits, certain conditions are necessary also. Hence the demand for legislation as well as education in dealing with the temperance problem. A fence around a plot of ground will not make it grow cabbages, but it may protect the young plants the gardener has set out and is cultivating.

A Roman Catholic Bishop of New Zealand has put the matter strikingly in this sentence: "For her beneficent action of building up character in the individual soul, the Church needs a favorable environment which the State ought to provide."

British Premier Ramsay MacDonald emphasized the point in this way: "They tell us we cannot be made sober by Act of Parliament. I hate these smug, pettifogging, and inaccurate pieces of proverbial philosophy. They are thrown off by men who cannot think, and they are believed in by fools. I say that every experience the world has had, and I do not care where you go for it,—go north, go south, go east, go west; keep within your Empire or go outside; confine your attention to the Anglo-Saxon race or go outside of it and take the Slavs—go anywhere that experiments have been made, and the conclusion is absolutely, inevitably and irresistibly, that you can make men and women sober by Act of Parliament."
