Mass Buying Commission
Hear Problems
of Gaspe Fishermen.

(C.F. by Guardian's Special Wire)
OTTAWA, Nov. 5—Problems of the Gaspe fishermen continued to occupy the mass buying commission this afternoon when Eugene Morin of Charlottetown, Bonaventure Co. presented evidence regarding the salmon and sweet fisheries. Mr. Morin had for 10 years been manager of the Fishermen's Cooperative in that district. There were 20 members of his cooperative, witness said.

The annual average catch of salmon in his territory was 150,000 pounds. The average net price for the fishermen was 10-12 cents per pound. In 1926 a price of 17 cents had been paid, but this had been cut to 13 cents in 1927. This 13 cents had been a 10 year average.

Imports Blamed

Mr. Morin attributed the reduced price to imports into the Montreal market of large quantities of Newfoundland salmon. This was sold as Gaspe salmon. He asked that imports of salmon from Newfoundland be prohibited and that, in any event, the sealing of Newfoundland salmon as Gaspe salmon be forbidden.

Salmon prices in Montreal and London dropped as soon as the Newfoundland fish came on the market, he witness said. He did not believe prices in London would be affected by a Canadian embargo on Newfoundland salmon because two carloads would have slight effect in London.

In recent years export of Gaspe salmon to London has increased. Last year, about 20 per cent of the catch was exported, this year about 30. The domestic price was not affected by the export surplus.

Farmers And Fishermen

Members of the cooperative, Mr. Morin said, were farmers as well as fishermen and the Association sold their agricultural products as well as fish.

J. J. Cowie of the Department of Fisheries was the next witness. "I have seen much money can be obtained by the primary producer," asked committee counsel, Norman Sommerville.

Mr. Cowie answered he thought it was possible to get this out of the agency of a committee of retailers, the wholesalers, and consumers' prices.

Some kind of control of marketing would have saved the fishermen money in 1927, witness answered the question.

"When you speak of feeding a surplus of fish to the markets gradually have you given any study to this practice in other commodities?" asked E. H. Weyburn.

"Yes," he replied, "in the long run you end in disaster."

In this instance of fish, we were dealing with our own home markets where there was no world competition, replied witness.

Doubts Trawler System

To find a domestic market the fishermen had to compete with other sources of food, Mr. Cowie said. He doubted whether the operations of French and United States trawlers were affecting the prices for Canadian fish.

The old methods were cheaper than trawler fishing, witness said. Basing his opinion on various official reports, Mr. Cowie believed there was a considerable spread in the prices of wholesalers to retailers and retailers to consumers.

Domestic Government inspection of fish for export was a service available to the fishermen, but this was not compulsory, said Mr. Cowie. He expressed the hope that the fishermen would ask that this be made compulsory. Up to the present, however, they had not.

Reply to Sam Factor (Lib. Toronto Northwest), Mr. Cowie considered if the retailer would accept a lower price to the consumer, the retailer would be recompensed by his gross profit.

"You have no fault to find in the spread," witness said, "between wholesaler and consumer," Mr. Factor. Witness replied in the negative.

Loebster Season

Mr. Cowie was questioned on the representations of Prince Edward Island fishermen to change the lobster fishing season now extending from Aug. 15 to Oct. 15 to Aug. 1 to Oct. 1.

The scientist which the department had engaged on the question had recommended against the change, replied witness. The department had been strongly advised this suggested change would be hard on the lobster stock as it would constitute too big a drain on the stock. There also were other reasons, witness added.

Answering O. L. Boulanger (Lib. Bellechasse), witness said Gaspe dried cod fish had an outstanding reputation in the world markets.

Mr. Cowie thought the troubles of the salmon fishermen of the Maritimes could be composed if it were insisted that all Newfoundland salmon were tagged. It would be unwise to do more than so designate them.

He thought the one salmon was as good as the other but "Gaspe salmon" was an established name.

Any marketing scheme for distribution of fish would have to contain an element of compulsion, said witness. One marketing board would not be enough to care for this whole industry, however.

The commission adjourned until 11 o'clock tomorrow.

Marketing Board Urged

OTTAWA, Nov. 5—Establishment of a marketing board to control the smoked herring industry of Charlotte County, New Brunswick was urged before the Royal Commission on mass buying in a memorandum filed with that body here today by Premier L. P. D. Tilley. The memorandum made an exhaustive survey of the problems of the Charlotte County fishermen.

As a measure to ameliorate conditions, the memorandum urged the Dominion Government to explore new markets both at home and abroad, for smoked herring especially in the United States.

The memorandum outlined a scheme under the natural products marketing act whereby the Charlotte County fishermen and dealers would organize to set up a marketing board which would ensure a regular and steady supply of smoked herring to the domestic market and also give the producers fair prices for their products.

OTTAWA, Nov. 5—Reduction in the mark-up of fish prices by retailers would allow the fishermen to get better prices and increase the home market for fish, J. J. Cowie, of the Department of Fisheries stated in a report for improvements in the industry filed with the mass buying commission today. Canada had a home market that could absorb more than 500,000 hundredweight of fresh and smoked cod and haddock under normal conditions annually, but was taking only half that quantity at present.

"My considered opinion," said the fisheries official, "is that this stagnating of the market for large quantities of fish in the mark-up prices of retailers, which on an average is 54 percent in Montreal and 35 percent in Toronto and that mark you is the gap between the wholesaler and retailer in Montreal and Toronto. With a reduction in the mark-up and a lower price to the consumer there would be an increase in the volume of business which in turn would result in the retailers' total profit being as great as the lower mark as at the higher."

As the fresh fish market was a home market, he was convinced "that the remedy for the economic ills of our fresh fish fishermen lies in the orderly marketing of fresh fish supplies under the supervision and advice of a marketing committee or board, call it what you like, appointed and given certain powers under the provisions of the marketing act and composed of representatives of the United Maritime Fishermen, the coast distributors, the wholesalers, and if practicable the retailers."

While smelt fishermen had not so much cause for complaint financially as cod and haddock fishermen, stated Mr. Cowie, "there is no doubt much money is lost annually by fishermen and coast buyers owing to the lack of any co-operation in marketing the product. This could be corrected if regulated shipments were made through the agency of a committee of smelt fishermen and buyers."

Much room existed for improvement in the marketing of live lobsters, the fisheries officer stated. The lobster fishery is limited seasonally, but it produces an annual surplus of about 400,000 hundredweights with a value when marketed of approximately $5,000,000," he said.

"At least three-quarters of the catch is preserved in cans and marketed chiefly outside of Canada where it enters into competition with Russian and Japanese canned crab meat and crayfish which is similar to the lobster. The balance of the catch is shipped to market in the shell, mainly to the United States. The fourth that is shipped in shell, however, is almost as high in money value as the three-quarters that is canned."

"Live lobster shipments to the United States mostly go forward on consignment, and as shipments are made over great stretches of the coast at the same time by individual fishermen, fishermen's cooperatives and coast buyers (usually canners), there is need for these agencies to get together and so regulate or control shipments as to have no room for unfair advantage being taken as at present by consignees in Boston, the principal market, when heavy shipments are made."

Dealing with salt fish, the fisheries officer said that while it was his opinion some form of government inspection would help this product to meet competition from that of other countries, "I am strongly of opinion that the keener part of the competition is really the one of price."

THE CHEESE
SMUGGLERS

The inauguration of National Cheese Week in Canada, to be held from November 10th to 17th in order to create the greater consumption of the finest cheese in the world, calls attention to the fact that, while the subject of cheese may leave the average Canadian somewhat indifferent, it evidently arouses in other nationalities a desire to battle for their own special variety of that commodity. The idea that the smuggling of cheese could ever figure as a source of revenue is, therefore, not only well brought to the face of the Canadian who is surrounded by the pick of the best of his own making, but what kind of smuggling goes on along the border between the United States and Canada is not surprising. It is not smuggling of diamonds or pearls or rubies to decorate the international beauties who through that glorious strip of southern France, neither is it for other contraband goods. It is cheese, just good, plain Italian cheese. But the Italians, it seems, are patriotic.

The thousands of Italians in Nice and throughout demand Italian cheese, although they have at hand nearly 40 different varieties of French cheese. There is a duty in France on foreign cheese and consequently, the French and Monaco Customs officials have to cope with a number of professional cheese smugglers. For instance they made a clever capture recently at Garavan on the St. Louis Bridge frontier. The roof of a tradesman's van looked rather bulky. The officials on the French side of the bridge did some sniffing and tapping, took a measurement of two dried up few strips of panelling, and found 370 pounds of fine cheese snugly stowed away on another occasion there was no necessity for much sniffing. A headdress of Gogonzola, far out at sea, declared itself and was found to be a mass of cheese. The agents of the gang sniffingly hauled a $3,000 fine and were released. Later on, another boatload of cheese was captured at sea, but as the smugglers managed to escape Italy to the rocky islands off Cannes, the agents of the gang sniffingly hauled a $3,000 fine and were released. Former Minister Appeals For Application of Christian Principles in Economic Sphere.

(C.F. by Guardian's Special Wire)
OTTAWA, Nov. 5—Hon. E. H. Stevens, former Minister of Trade and Commerce, took to the pulpit last night to criticize the control by corporate interests of the economic life of Canada. He said: "Thousands of people in Canada are suffering day by day, month by month and year by year, because there is at the head of the big corporations in this country an icicle instead of a human soul."

The former minister, talking from the pulpit of St. James United Church, lashed out against those to whom he attributed responsibility for low wages paid in industry and appealed for the application of Christian principles to Canada's economic system.

"It matters little what sort of a social or economic system you have," said Mr. Stevens, "if it has not a real, sound, moral backbone it cannot contribute much to the happiness of the people."

The former minister, adopting the practise of the pulpit, drew the attention of his hearers to the text: "Love the Lord thy God with all thy strength... and thy neighbor as thyself." His purpose, he intimated, was to concentrate upon the latter portion of the precept, for therein lay the whole basis of remarks on "economics and religion."

Recently, he said, he had been severely criticized in the press for having spoken in a Toronto church. He had been charged with using the pulpit for political purposes. "I positively deny any such thought or intention," said Mr. Stevens. "I am speaking here because I have been invited to do so."

Any conception of religion must take into consideration one's contact with one's fellows. Much had been heard of Hitler and Mussolini and Lenin, but rarely did one hear of the economics of Jesus—the man of Nazareth. In Christ's precepts were some of the most pregnant doctrines to guide economic life. That relating to christian stewardship should be more widely taught. One of the greatest concepts of sociology ever given to the world was that all wealth was a trust.

"That fact did not interfere with the capitalist or any other system. All it meant was that if a person was to command wealth, he must exercise it in the interests of all the people. The fact ran through all Christian doctrine that wealth and trusteeship were a trust. If, then, all wealth was a trust, it followed that the greater the wealth the larger the responsibility."

Mr. Stevens presented two pictures. One was of a local employer of labor who throughout the depression had retained in his employ all his workmen, despite the economic difficulties attendant upon so doing. The other was of a corporation which had practised wholesale dismissals.

"The man at the head of the corporation asked how he could possibly have knowledge of the affairs of those he employed. Any man owes it to his employees to know their circumstances. If he can not secure that individually he can do so by agreement with them," said Mr. Stevens.

Many years ago the late Woodrow Wilson, when he was President of Princeton University, said that society could not afford to have individuals wielding the power of thousands and have the strongest men inaccessible by law. That, said Mr. Stevens, was correct. Corporations had succeeded individuals and because corporations could not be put in jail they did what other people could not do. In that lay the weakness of much of Canada's corporate law.

"Anyone possessed of great wealth who lies back and does nothing is a parasite on the state. But," said Mr. Stevens, "if he lends his services to the country and if he directs his possessions for the benefit of the state, then he deserves well of the people."

The former minister recalled a visit he had made to Northern Saskatchewan and Alberta some time ago. The farmers there were destitute, but they did not complain. Instead they gathered together 120 carloads of vegetables and sent them to the southern areas of the prairies where the people were living in even worse circumstances than they.

He met a farmer who informed him that, having dispatched some good, fat cattle to the market, he had received for them only $10 a head. This man had not complained, he was helpless. But in Toronto, in control of the great corporate power which directed the livestock business were men who dictated the price of these cattle. It is because he had been drawing this to the attention of the people of Canada that he had been charged, said Mr. Stevens, with speaking out of turn. There were thousands suffering in Canada today because at the head of big corporations there was "an icicle instead of a human soul."

If the economic structure was controlled by corporations who refused to look at the human side, then, in common parlance, the people were left "holding the bag."

"And that," added Mr. Stevens, "is what is happening all over Canada."

ORPHANS' FRIEND—Millionaire "orphans' friends" J. D. O'Connell, who has several times visited Charlottetown, recently visited Edmonton during his annual 50,000-mile tour of all America. He inspected the orphans' institution which bears his name and, as well, looked into some of his financial interests, including real estate and wheat lands. Mr. O'Connell would not give anything to Homes for the Aged, he announced. He himself is a septuagenarian. "Well, they've had their opportunities, and their lives, and apparently wasted them. Oh, I have nothing against the old folk—I'm just a lot more interested in orphans: the boys and girl who, if given a chance today, will be the grown people who run this world next year. They've got to have their chance. "That's my life work—that and fighting the booze traffic. You can't make that too strong; the language, I mean. That's the one thing that I'm more interested in that I am even in providing funds for orphans."—Montreal Star.

(C.F. by Guardian's Special Wire)
OTTAWA, Nov. 5—Dr. E. D. Ylting the Lazaretto here, Hon. Dr. Murray MacLaren, Minister of Penalties and National Health, announced his department would construct a recreation hall for the inmates of the Lazaretto. The structure 30 feet by 100, will be used as a rink in the winter as well as for recreation in other seasons. A bowling green also will be built for the patients.

Mr. MacLaren is the first Minister of National Health to visit the institution. It was his second visit, the first having been in 1932.

RAILWAY AWARDED GOLD MEDAL FOR EXHIBIT

MONTREAL, Que., Nov. 6—Award of a gold medal to the Canadian National Railway for the excellence of their display of the railway system at the Canadian National exhibition has been made and the medal has reached Canadian National headquarters here.

On the occasion of the medal is a reproduction of a photograph of His Excellency the Earl of Bessborough. On the reverse side is shown the official Coat of Arms of the Canadian National Exhibition. The display which won this award for the Canadian National Railway featured the evolution of railway transportation during the last century and was designed and built by the General Publicity Department of the railway.

The schoolmaster was also Chief of the village fire brigade.

"Jones," he remarked in school one day, "correct the following sentence: 'Before any damage could be done the fire was put out by the village fire brigade.'"

"Yes, sir," replied the boy. "The fire was put out before any damage could be done by the village fire brigade."
