

A Fashion Hint

SMART TRIPLE TIERS

A sophisticated fashion for the little sub-deb who demands frocks just like the grown-ups wear. The triple tiered skirt flutters so gracefully, and is such a decided smart change from full gathered skirt. Style No. 529 isn't altogether formal. Indeed not! It's just one of those more feminine types that Paris considers so important this season. It is just as smart and wearable as can be made of printed sprigged dimity in rose-pink tones, orchid voile, blue cotton foulard printed with white polka-dots, printed voile in geometric motifs in yellow, orange and brown, Nile green chambray and pale blue and white checked gingham. For "dress-up" occasions select printed crepe de chine. White voile is girlish for graduation frock. Taffeta in water-melon pink or peach shade in geometric crepe is adorable for parties and summer vacation wardrobe. Pattern comes in sizes 6, 8, 10, 12 and 14 years. In the 8-year size, 1 1/2 yards of 38-inch material with 3 1/2 yards of ribbon is all that is needed. Price 15 cents in stamps or coin (coin is preferred). Wrap coin carefully.

We suggest that when you send for this pattern, you enclose 10 cents additional for a copy of our Spring Fashion Magazine. It's just filled with delightful styles, including smart ensembles and cute designs for the kiddies.

BYRON REQUEST SLIGHTED

With the perfection of plans for the placing in the Vaughan Library at Harrow School, England, the stump of the elm tree under which Byron sat, has arisen the problem of the neglected grave of his daughter. The elm under which the poet mused was the object of pilgrimage for Byron's worshippers for nearly a century. A gale, then a fire, destroyed the tree, and in 1918 Rev. J. Joyce, the vicar of Harrow, took up the stump and had it preserved. Now wormeaten, it will be housed in an oak case. Meanwhile, disputants declare, the body of Byron's daughter, Allegra, who died at Florence at the age of five, lies in Harrow Parish Church in an unknown grave without indication, although Byron had directed that a tablet in her honor be erected in the church.

From Mother of Six

"I think Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is wonderful! I have had six children of which four are living and my youngest is a bonnie baby boy now eight months old who weighs 23 pounds. I have taken your medicine before each of them was born and have certainly received great benefit from it. I urge my friends to take it as I am sure they will receive the same help I did."

Wives' Injustice to Husbands
Dorothy Dix

Women Who Bring Up Their Children to Believe That Mothers Have a Monopoly on Parental Love Rob Their Husbands of Their Rightful Heritage of Filial Gratitude and Affection

I often wonder what women think their husbands think about their children. The attitude of the average mother is that she possesses a monopoly on parental love and that her husband's feelings toward his children is merely the mild affection of a casual acquaintance. The mother considers that she is the one who cherishes the children, who sacrifices for them, who is anxious and worried over them and whose heart would break if she was parted from them.

Not one woman in a thousand ever even suspects that his children may be the very core of her husband's soul and that his passion of devotion to them surpasses hers.

Yet the wife expects the husband to work and support these children for whom she thinks he cares so little. She sees him growing old before his time, toiling to give his sons and daughters advantages of education that he never had himself. She sees him slaving at his job through summer heat and winter cold to give his family the vacations he never takes himself. She sees him going shabby that the girls may have pretty frocks and driving the old flivver so that the boys may race around in a sport car.

But it doesn't occur to the mother that the reason the father does these things for his children is because he loves them better than he does himself or that the man who spends his life toiling to support his family has sacrificed just as much to his children as their mother has.

Now this belief that women cherish that they love their children better than their husbands do would matter little except that mothers, perhaps unconsciously and unintentionally, inculcate the idea in their children's minds and thus rob the father of the gratitude and affection from their children that are his due and that are the only reward she can possibly receive for all that he does for them.

From their very boyhood the mother teaches her children that she is their friend, that she is their protection from the harshness of their father, that she is the one who wants to indulge them in everything and that father is the one who denies. She is the mediator who stands between them and father's wrath.

It is mother who wheedles the new skates out of father for Johnny when father has said that he can't afford them. It is mother who runs up the bills that make father groan because she says that Mary must have as pretty clothes as the other girls. It is mother who helps Jane to slip out for a joyride with young Blank of whom father disapproves. It is mother who is always on the children's side making them feel that she is the one who loves them and who wants them to be indulged and to be happy, and so they grow up under the impression that father cares nothing for them and is utterly indifferent to their welfare.

Worse still, many women hold father as a club over their children's heads. The children visualize him in their infancy as a figure of terror whose purpose in the family is to beat their small bodies and deal out harsh punishments for childish misdemeanors and they never see him in any kinder light. Nothing is more common than to hear a woman say to a child: "I'll tell your father about that when he comes home tonight." Oh! "I'll have your father give you a good thrashing for that," and she never seems to realize what an injustice she is doing both the child and the father.

For she is making the child hate the father and she is defrauding the father of the thing that he most desires in life, the love and confidence of his children. It must be a bitter thing to a man who has worked his fingers to the bones for his family, who has denied himself the gratification of every personal taste and whim to give likewise to them, to realize when they are grown that he has scarcely a speaking acquaintance with his sons and daughters; that they fall silent in his presence and have nothing to say to him; that they never show him the slightest evidence of affection and that they turn to their mother for sympathy and companionship.

Yet you can see this tragedy of the family, in which the father is the outsider, in many households. And all because mother has brought up the children in the belief that she was the only one who loved them.

Another illustration of women's fallacious belief that they alone are capable of parental affection is shown by their action in divorce cases, when they part a man from his children with no more compunctions of conscience than they would have in separating him from a pair of old shoes. Many women break up their homes for no good reason. They have gotten tired of matrimony and want to be free or they have lost their love for their husbands or they have fallen in love with some other man and they jump up an excuse to leave him and rush with it to the divorce courts and ask for custody of the children.

It would kill them to have to give up the children. They couldn't endure the silence of a house in which there was no patter of little feet, no little faces watching against the window pane. They would go mad with longing for the feel of little arms around their necks and little hands clinging to theirs, but they have no hesitation in inflicting this ruthless cruelty upon the children's father.

Yet there are many men who have the paternal passion just as highly developed as any woman has the maternal passion men who are all fathers just as there are some women who are all mothers. There are even men who are bad husbands who are good fathers and there are millions upon millions of men whose love for their children makes them stand by the bad bargains they have made in matrimony and endure the nagging and the tempers and the pretty tyrannies of wives who make their lives a hell on earth for them.

Believe me, if women could look into men's hearts and see how they love their children and crave their children's love many a one would be more careful not to alienate her children's affections from their father and many a one would not be guilty of the inhuman cruelty of taking a man's children away from him and leaving him desolate just because she lost her taste for him.

TEETH LIKE PEARLS

It is difficult to know how to choose among the many dentifrices and toothbrushes on the market, yet there is always a satisfaction in knowing that you have chosen the one best suited to your particular needs. Teeth vary greatly in the hardness of the outer enamel, and what is excellent for some would injure others. The best way to settle this question is to ask a specialist. Your dentist will tell you the special agents that your teeth require.

It is important to learn how to clean the teeth effectively. First, choose a good cleansing agent, such as powdered chalk and powdered orris root, to be had at any drug store. Second, select the right toothbrush. The brush part should be short and the bristles long and widely spaced. Some authorities recommend a circular movement with the brush. Another method which my own dentist advocates and which seems to me superior to others is a long, sweeping movement. The side of the brush is pressed against the side of the teeth and gums, the brush is rotated away from the gums. The bristles penetrate between the teeth and brush out the food particles. Repeat six times in the same place. This type of brushing stimulates the gums also, but does not irritate them. All the teeth should be brushed on both sides in this manner, then the grinding surfaces should be brushed with a rotary, jiggling motion.

Dental floss should be used between the teeth at bedtime. Gently press down the floss along the right side of the one tooth until it reaches the gum. Now press the floss against the left side of the next tooth as you bring it up. This cleans both sides of the narrow space between the teeth and also minimizes injury to the gums. Careless use of dental floss, causing bleeding and irritation, is of course to be condemned.

Your dentist will tell you that a simple solution of salt makes an excellent tooth wash to use daily. Use one-quarter teaspoonful of salt in a glass of water. Lime water is also a good rinse for the mouth, as it "dissolves the deposit of mucin that clings to the teeth, permitting the growth of bacteria." Commercial mouth washes are refreshing and when prescribed by your dentist are helpful. In the average case, however, the simple, inexpensive lotion is all that is really needed.

ATHFORD WINS JUBILEE RACE

KEMPTON PARK, Eng., May 13.—Athford, by Blandford out of Athasi and owned by W. Barnett, won the Great Jubilee Friday.
Trelewyn was second, and Cabaloro was third.
Reign Count, famous American horse, was in the field, but did not finish in the money.
Athford won by a length, while there was a head between second and third. Seventeen ran. The betting on Athford was 100-12; on Trelewyn, 100-7, and on Cabaloro, 10-2.

Invaders Dictate Terms To The Cantonese

(Special to The Guardian)
CANTON, China, May 13.—Canton and the surrounding provinces of Kwangtung have purchased peace from invading Kwangites, but at a heavy price. With three large armies approaching the southern Chinese metropolis from each of its three landward sides capture seemed imminent and with looting and rapine as an alternative, the Kwangsi chiefs were able to dictate their terms. These terms were, it was understood, monthly payments of $750,000
