Origin Of Tea Caddy And Early Importance

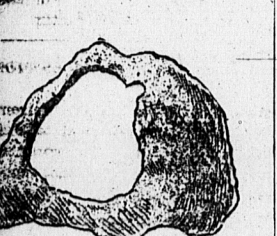

Became Fashionable and Conspicuous in Reign of Anne.

When tea-drinking first came to be popular and fashionable in the reign of Queen Anne, the tea caddy to be a very important article in household use upon which the spender expended a great deal of care and attention. For tea was still a luxury to be carefully preserved in a receptacle fit to appear at a fashionable tea-table, writes Charles Bell in the London Sketch.

UNCLE RAY'S CORNER

UNCLE RAY'S CORNER ... AT METEOR CINDERS ARE LIKE

How large are meteors? We cannot say what is the size of the largest. Some are certainly larger than a room before they are burned up by rubbing against the air.

A meteor cinder, found near Tucson, Arizona, weighs 1,100 pounds. Notice the hole burned in passage through air.

A meteor was seen to fall in Huntsville, Tenn. on Jan. 1866. It sank into the ground, men dug it out—finding it 11 feet below the surface. This meteor cinder weighs 547 pounds.

At the American Museum of Natural History I saw a much larger one than that. It was brought from Greenland, and weighs 36 tons. It is one of the largest ever found.

A YOUTHFUL INTERPRETATION

A new youthful interpretation of straight slender lines in a charming printed silk crepe that depends entirely on its clever cut for smartness. It features the becoming bateau neckline trimmed with binding of plain crepe, with a jabot frill caught in with binding which is stitched at side of bodice to waistline falling in graceful ripples.

Is Equality of Education Necessary to Happy Marriage?—What Kind of Girl do Boys Like Best?—Pleasure-Loving Wife of the Tired Salesman

Dear Dorothy Dix—Since education is considered such an important factor by most people much argument has arisen between us on the question as to whether or not it is advisable for a young man with a college education to marry a girl who has had only two years of high school.

On the other hand, I know many men and women who had very little schooling—some of them did not even go through the grammar school—who have studied and read and become highly intellectual.

So, as I said, it depends on the girl herself. If she loves books she will educate herself. Many women do this. The women's clubs have been called "the married women's universities," and they are filled with women who are studying literature and history and attending lectures on art and architecture.

If I were you I would put far more stress on a girl's attitude toward cultural subjects than I would on how many years of high school or college she had had.

If she never read anything more than a sexy novel, however, if she didn't read the papers and was still under the impression that Mr. Hoover was a vacuum cleaner, if she took no interest in anything except what went on in her own little circle and thought what they were doing in it more important than what Kemal Pasha is doing in Turkey, then I would have none of her no matter if she had ground through the high school.

For I would know she would never have any real education. She would always be dull and stupid and tiresome and boring and her conversational repertoire would never get any further than the back fence and the front door.

Generally speaking, it makes for the happiness of a family for the man to be better educated than his wife and her mental superior, because men like to pose as the family oracle and women like to look up to their husbands as oracles.

Dear Miss Dix—First. What kind of girl do the boys like best and what qualities do they admire in a girl? Second. Do the men of today appreciate a girl with high ideals and why are not such girls more popular? Third. Does a boy of 21 know his own mind with regard to love? Fourth. Can a very plain-looking girl be a real friend to a boy? TWO CHUMS.

My goodness, what a lot of questions! They comprise the whole art of being a girl. But to answer them:

First. There is no particular type of girl who makes a universal hit with all boys, because every boy has his own individual taste in girls. Some like them tall and some like them short. Some like Amazons and some like pocket Venuses. Some gentlemen prefer blondes and others fall for brunettes. Some like to chase girls and others like to be chased by them.

The qualities that boys like in girls are generally simplicity and sincerity and friendliness. They don't like girls who high-hat them nor girls who make them do all the talking. They like girls who know how to dance and play tennis and golf and who are good sports.

Second. There are a few men who appreciate girls with high ideals, but truth compels me to admit that it is the neekers and the petters and the girls who drink and smoke who have the most dates. Men like that kind to have fun with, but when a worthwhile man decides to get married he passes up the little booze hound for some girl who has kept herself pure and sweet and sober. He doesn't care to have a drunken wife nor an alcoholic mother for his children.

Third. Sometimes a boy of 21 knows his own mind about love and is in love for keeps, but it is a big risk to take. It is far wiser for both him and the girl to wait until he is older and more settled and has looked 'em over, so that he knows what he wants in a wife and won't want to swap her off for another in a couple of years. Besides, a boy of 21 seldom has any way of supporting a wife.

Fourth. Of course, a plain-looking girl can attract men. Look at the married women around you. Not many of them would ever have taken a prize in a beauty show. Some of the most fascinating women in the world are homely as mud fences. But the plain girl must cultivate a line of attractions and be on the job of making herself agreeable to men.

Dear Miss Dix—I am a woman of 41 and my trouble is that I am full of life and my feet just ache to dance and I love a good evening out with my husband, who would rather stay at home and sleep. He is a traveling man away from us eight months of the year, and I always say to my children, who are now in business, "Wait until dad comes home, then we will all have a good time," but he just wants to stay at home and sleep. Is it wrong for a woman of my age to want to have a good time? MRS. B.

Certainly not. A woman of 41 is just in her prime. She has done her big job of rearing her children and is entitled to all the pleasure she can get out of the balance of her life.

Why don't you go about taking your pleasure in a rational way? If you want to dance, why don't you join some dancing class or make arrangements to go with a friend one evening to some place where you can dance? Your children are grown, why not go with them? They are sufficient escort and probably they would enjoy it, whereas it bores your poor, tired husband stiff.

DO NOT STEAR THE OIL ON THE HAIR Thin, Dry Hair

Dear Miss Leeds—I have much trouble with my hair. It is thin and dry and is constantly falling out. How can I prevent this? JUST BABE.

Answer—I could advise you better if I knew your age and the state of your health, as hair health is closely related to the general physical condition. First, build up your health by right diet, sufficient rest and outdoor exercise.

Darkening the Hair Dear Miss Leeds—I would like to have my hair darker than it is. Will you please tell me exactly how to use sage for this purpose? Does it harm the hair? NAN.

Answer—Sage tea is a harmless hair wash, but is so show in its darkening action that most women have not the patience to use it. I cannot tell whether it would be worth while for you to try it, because you have not told me the color and general condition of your hair.

Freckle Cream Dear Miss Leeds—(1) I have been using freckle cream every night for more than a month. It has made my skin very white, but the freckles are larger and darker than before.
