Ellen's Diary

By an Island Farmer's Wife

Carrying out Jamie's plans of last evening, the two youngest kitcats, able now to crowd with numerous adults around the cat-pan, were hunted down happily and brought to a comfortable nest of hay in a carton and located in the kitchen this morning. All doors to the place must be kept closed to prevent their escape which in a way was no hardship since the chill and dampness still continued into today. But presently however, kittens and all were deserted by Jamie called unexpectedly home to prepare to attend a clinic to receive a first inoculation, as granddaughter has, against a number of things. This evening he took care to shield an arm and appeared to be rather listless while his brother was strangely fretful and plainly disgusted with his world-at-large. Rob's family have been here and gone now through an evening made dreary outdoors by continuing cold rainfall and wayward winds. "This must be the sheep storm!" James commented of it, as he helped the youngsters into the machine and Karolyn laughed and asked: "And what would we call the others we've been having?" Concerned about the backward weather our farmers reckon "if things don't soon straighten away, we won't have the crop in by July!" Plowing and all cultivating was stopped at Alderlea by this afternoon's rain but not all work ended, for at once attention was directed toward the preparations for the treatment of our seed potatoes, an annual indoor endeavor to the farmers minds most necessary and which now is just in the offing. Rob's were at theirs today and of all days, I suspect this was one in which Karolyn was conscious of the hours' flight. All other interests must halt when the bath period for the tubers has reached its limit of time.

In spite of its greyness and rain, this has been a red letter day for this family since in the round of swift passing months time fetched grand-daughter's second birthday. If being well sheltered, and loved, and remembered by many a one, makes for happiness, then our small sunny-haired girl, in the house across the lane must have been a very happy child today. "And how old are you today?" Jamie old in his six years asked her. "Two!" she replied, closing her lips with a decided air and still woman-like lingering to see how her answer had pleased him. "Ha, you're getting pretty old aren't you?" She nodded and broke into a smile such as only small ones can give, and is always adorable. She is exceedingly precious to us, this small one, a never-failing source of interest and joy though I well know she is not one bit more winsome than other maids of two. She is mostly obedient yet has a keen mind and strong will of her own, the later of which sometimes clashes tearfully with her mother's over a matter of obedience. So far her unaffected ways and quaint sayings are much enjoyed by the family.

This evening, in an interval which suited Rob's potato treating, we met in the house across the lane in celebration of the anniversary. It was a happy gathering — it so happened that her two grandmothers were present and as usual Jamie close beside his grand-father at table. It came to me as we sat

DOROTHY DIX SAYS—

Married To Miser

Good Wife Rates Token Of Remembrance From Husband Now And Then

DEAR DOROTHY DIX: I have a perfectly wonderful husband who is almost the answer to a maiden's prayer, except for one thing That is that he never makes me any sort of a present, not even the smallest. He feeds me, clothes me, pays the doctors' bills when I am sick, but he always does all the buying. He has never given me a Christmas, birthday, or any other kind of a present. I thought that after our beautiful baby daughter was born that maybe he would give me a bar of candy for Mother's Day, but nothing happened.

I would just love to have had the present of a handkerchief, or even a chocolate bar would be beloved by me if it came from him. It is just being overlooked, when other men are giving their wives some token of remembrance, that hurts me. And it isn't because he couldn't afford it.

POOR WIFE.

ANSWER: You have evidently married the champion of the Tightwad Crew, and I greatly fear that there is no way of loosening his grip on his pocketbook, for that kind of stinginess is not incidental, as they say in the movies. It is something that is born in a person. Not an acquired talent.

PINCH-PENNY SYSTEM

It would be interesting, however, to know how your husband carries out his pinch-penny system. He certainly must have to trust you with a quarter, now and then, for incidental expenses, even when he does all the marketing himself and so doesn't run the risk of having you waste a dime on a candy bar.

And inasmuch as you do all of the cooking and washing and ironing and baby-tending, don't you get a single tip? And is he as close with other men as he is with you? Or does he occasionally blow someone to a drink?

I am a great believer in planned economy, and I think that every wife should be a thrifty manager and help her husband lay up something for a rainy day, but miserliness can become as great a vice as extravagance is. And surely a good wife rates some token of remembrance from her husband now and then.

DEAR DOROTHY DIX: At what age should a girl start going out casually with boys? At what age should she start going out steady? I am 19 years of age and have been working for two years, but my father objects to my going out with boys until I am 21. He says that by that time I will know my own mind.

TROUBLED

ANSWER: There is no way in which you can set a definite time limit on what a girl should do, because some girls develop so much earlier than others do. I should think that a girl who has been earning her own living for two years was grown-up enough to decide this question for herself.

Your father makes a mistake when he thinks that by keeping you from having any dates until you are 21 years old you will know how to conduct yourself properly. The reverse is exactly the case, because if a young girl never steps out with boys or has any dates it makes her self-conscious and stiff and awkward in dealing with them. In

That Body Of Yours

By James W. Barton, M. D.

STONES IN APPENDIX

Some weeks ago I mentioned the fact that, as several surgeons had found some small stones in the appendix during operations, they thought they were grape stones. Further investigation showed that these stones were small, hard masses of the waste matter (feces) of the lower bowel.

Just as gall stones are formed in the gall bladder and kidney stones in the kidney, so small stones (calculi) are sometimes formed in the appendix. And just as gall stones and kidney stones may not cause any symptoms unless they are disturbed, so also with stones in the appndix.

In "Radiology" Syracuse, N. Y., Drs. B. Felson and C. M. Bernhard report their observation of 10 patients with stones in the appendix. Nine of these cases were examined by X-ray from which a diagnosis was made. One patient did not have an X-ray examination, and stones were found upon operating.

In addition to the above mentioned 10 cases, Drs. Felson and Bernhard review 100 other case reported by other physicians and surgeons, and conclude that stones in the appendix are not uncommon and really present a serious condition.

Acute appendicitis requiring immediate operation due to perforation of the stone through the wall of the appendix, occurs in nearly one-half of these cases where stones are present.

Once the diagnosis of stones in the appendix is made, immediate operation must be performed to save life. Fortunately, in the great majority of cases, the X-rays will show the presence of the stones. It is considered that, in every case of stone formation in the right lower portion of the abdomen, the diagnosis of stones in the appnedix should be considered and steps taken to confirm or disprove it.

A number of years ago, in the "Journal of the American Medical Association," a young physician ventured the opinion that gas pressure in the intestine closed the opening of the appendix so that waste material in the appendix became dry and hard. This dry and hard material would thus be the stones frequently found.

The Stars Say--

By Genevieve Kemble

For Thursday, June 17

A STARTLING new discovery, a stroke of genius or scientific invention or finding, might have power to change entirely the tides of destiny, although such might demand the abrupt termination of the status quo and a sensational turning of the contacts, affairs and interests into new fields. The sudden spading-up could be complete and far-reaching, if not revolutionary. Strange techniques, executed with firm and persistent hand, with aggressive, strenuous, even dramatic potency, should be sustained by sound thinking and workable creative force. The element of romance should not be lacking, with probable adventure in fresh pastures.

For the Birthday

Those whose birthday it is, may prepare themselves for a spectacular invention of fate, in which something unusual, startling and of practical worth should be demonstrated with much practical ingenuity and application. Constructive endeavors in putting over unique skills or curious discoveries could prove revolutionary and far-reaching in their final denouement. Brilliant ideas, inauguarted with determination and acumen, might spell substantial and long-range security and gratification. Unpredictable developments may bring radical spading-up, with romance and adventure capitalized.

A child born on this day is brilliantly endowed with ingenuity, skill, inventive genius, with the force, determination and influence to reap rich returns.

When Starching

Sometimes ordinary starch will produce a whitish cast to black and dark-colored clothes. Try putting a small amount of leftover coffee (just the brew, and not the grounds) into the starch.

Oil Dropper

If the oil can has been misplaced, or refused to work, and a little oil is required by the sewing machine or other household appliance, use an old medicine dropper. The drops can be counted even better than when using the oil can.

Peeled Apples

Peeled apples will retain their white color if they are kept in a vessel covered with salt water until used.

Modern Etiquette

A. A drinking glass is held a little below the center between the thumb and first two fingers. The handle of the coffee cup is grasped by the thumb and first two fingers, the third and fourth being bent toward the palm.

Q. Is it obligatory that a bride and bridegroom have a maid-of-honor and a best man?

A. No; but the presence of two witnesses is traditional and is seldom disregarded.

Q. How much should one tip porters on trains

A BIT SLIM

A disreputable-looking character waylaid a member of a swanky club as he stepped into his car.

"Just gimme a penny, mister," he whined, "I'm starving."

The member of the club obliged, but could not help remarking:

"I'm afraid you won't be able to buy much food for a penny these days."

"It's not for food," said the tramp. "I ain't had a bite now for six days, and I want to weigh myself!"

Q. What is the best way to wash rugs?

Cook's Corner

BAKED STUFFED HALIBUT

2 halibut steaks
2 cups bread crumbs
2 tablespoons minced onion
1 tablespoon minced parsley
Dash of pepper
½ teaspoon salt
½ teaspoon sage
½ cup hot water
2 tablespoons melted fat
1 can condensed tomato soup

METHOD: The halibut steaks should be about 1 inch thick for this. Wipe them with a damp cloth and place one in the bottom of a well greased baking dish.

Make a dressing by mixing together the bread crumbs, onion, parsley, seasonings and then sprinkle this with the hot water and the melted fat. Pile this up on the halibut steak in the baking dish and cover with the second steak.

Pour over this the contents of the can of condensed tomato soup and bake in a moderate oven (350 deg. F.) for about 30 minutes, or until the fish is done. Serve garnished with lemon wedges, and with the sauce in the pan.
