CAN SAVE REPAIRING FARM MACHINERY

Because machinery is one of the largest and most important factors in the production of crops, it is essential that it be kept in as good repair as possible. Most of this repairing can be done on the farm during the winter months or at some other slack season.

To do much repair work the farm should have a reasonably well equipped work shop, says K. E. Bowren, Dominion Experimental Station, Melfort, Sask., This means there should be a fairly large building where the tools are kept and where the whole machine or a good portion of it can be taken inside to be repaired. The shop should be equipped with a stove or some other means of heat to make winter work possible. It should also be equipped with a large bench space, drawers and pegs for holding tools and spare parts, a bench vise and possibly a forge. Although the forge is not absolutely necessary for minor repair work it is necessary for straightening harder metals and can be used, with a little experience on the part of the operator, for soft iron welding.

To avoide unnecessary delays during the busy season, all machinery should be given a complete checking over at least once a year. This makes it possible to change or repair worn parts before they cause serious damage to other parts.

In checking a machine all the moving parts should be removed and thoroughly washed in gasoline to remove dirt and dust which mix with old grease to form a grinding compound. The bearings should all be removed, cleaned, and checked for wear, if worn they should be replaced. Any bent or broken parts of the machine should be taken down, straightened, repared or placed with new ones.

It is far cheaper to replace a bearing than to buy a new axle or other shaft, just as it is cheaper to repair a slightly used machine rather than to buy a new one at present day prices.

Tobacco Growing Now Big Business

In both Canada and the United States, tobacco production holds an important place in the agricultural life of the two countries, said Dr. N. A. MacRae, chief, Tobacco Division, Dominion Department of Agriculture, in a recent address at Brockville, Ont. In Canada, the largest tobacco growing area is devoted to the production of cigarette tobacco which is frequently referred to as flue-cured, or Virginia, tobacco. It is in this connection that the greatest expansion has been made during the past few decades.

In addition, substantial quantities of burley tobacco are produced. This kind of tobacco is used primarily in pipe mixtures, light plugs, and to some extent in blendid cigarettes. There are also two so-called sub-types of dark tobacco, namely, dark air — and dark fire-cured. The varieties grown in each sub-type are distinct and different. Curing of the dark fire-cured tobacco is done in large barns which are kept filled with smoke throughout the entire operation.

Cigar leaf is also grown, principally in the Province of Quebec. There are three parts to a cigar leaf, namely, filler, binder, and wrapper. Production in Canada is devoted to the growing of cigar filler and binder leaf. Most of the wrapper leaf is imported. Some attempt at present is being made in the Province of Quebec to produce cigar wrapper grades. In addition to the foregoing, some pipe tobaccos are grown, of which a portion is used for cigar filler purposes.

All types of tobacco, with the exception of the flue-cured, or Virginia, cigarette tobaccos are grown in mixed farming areas. Flue-cured tobacco, however, is a big industry and is not produced merely as a cash crop or as a sideline. It constitutes the farmer's principal source of income.

An indication of the expansion of tobacco growing in Canada, Mr. MacRae said that total production of all leaf of various types amounted to less than 29 million MacRae said that total production exceeded 141 million pounds, of which about 120 million pounds were of the flue-cured type. In fact, there was an increase of 275 per cent in production during the past decade over that produced during the previous decade.

U. S. Aid Has Kept Greece "Still Free"

WASHINGTON, Nov 12—(AP) —President Truman said today that United States aid has kept Greece "still free," but that the over-all military picture has darkened because of support thrown to Communist-led guerrillas by Greece's northern neighbors.

In his first report to Congress on the $400,000,000 Greek-Turkish aid program, Truman made these points:

1. There are no United States combat troops in Greece.

2. To restore order, "reliance must be placed" on creation of a United Nations commission "which can effectively seal the Greek border against assistance to the guerrillas from Greece's northern neighbors" — Yugoslavia, Bulgaria and Albania.

Expressing "grave concern" that "underlying causes of economic and political unrest" still exist in Greece, Truman went on:

"It can be said that all of the elements for Greek recovery now are present and can begin to be operative once internal order is established. If order can be restored, there is every reason to be optimistic about the recovery of Greece. If order is not restored, there can be no recovery."

The report disclosed that up to Sept. 30, only about five per cent of the $300,000,000 allotted to Greece and only an infinitesimal part of Turkey's $100,000,000 share had actually been spent.

Summing up, the president declared:

"While it is too early to claim substantive success in the mission's work, its very presence in Greece and the material assistance thus far given have been responsible for the fact that Greece is still free and that her people still have a government of their own choosing. This fact in itself is ample justification for the aid program."
