SUPERB SCREEN DRAMA AT THE PRINCE EDWARD

"The Vanishing American" One of Zane Grey's Greatest Stories Makes Hit on Silver Sheet.

The first and only reproduction of the history making episode of the conquering of the Cliff-dwellers by the ravaging Indian nation of Navajos has been made in the filming by Paramount of "The Vanishing American."
A large portion of the 10,000 Indians who appear in the screen version of Zane Grey's great tribute to a fast disappearing race took part in the making of these scenes. They entailed the construction of huge settings in the almost inaccessible Sagi Canyon in northern Arizona, and also the building of the largest individual setting erected on the great Laasy ranch in the San Fernando Valley, California, in years.
The Navajos obtained their first real civilization from the Cliff-dwellers, whom we now know as the Hopis, following the defeat of the latter. Just how they scaled the almost impregnable walls of the people who dwelt far up on the cliffs, how they waged a fierce, hand-to-hand battle for hours before the Navajos routed the defenders and tossed them to death on the rocks below, is shown in these scenes.
The cliff-dwellers reproduced on the Laasy ranch constitute a production of the immense Betsak and Kiteel cliff houses as they would appear if they were restored to their majestic grandeur of three thousand years ago. More than 100,000 feet of lumber and 63 tons of plaster went into their building. To have transported these materials over tortuous trails in Arizona would have constituted an engineering feat beyond the present skill of mankind.
This is just one of the hundreds of episodes that make up "The Vanishing American" which opened at the Prince Edward Theatre last night. Richard Dix appears as the Indian hero, Noah Beery and Malcolm McGregor complete the list of featured players. The adaptation of Zane Grey's story to the screen was made by Lucien Hubbard. Ethel Doherty wrote the continuity. George B. Seltz directed.
Fox News, tapering off this splendid program was more than the exciting musical accompaniment which is being some good "Shots" of John Mills beating Steenroos the Finn in the recent Boston 26 mile marathon race.
The Prince Edward Trio never heard to better advantage in other theatres, the splendid musical accompaniment to the picture which will be their welfare, and that of the dependents of the disabled and the fallen may be safeguarded.

It shall stand for strong and united comradeship among all those who have served in His Majesty's forces throughout the Empire, so that neither their rights, their duties nor their interests shall be forgotten, and so that the dependents of the disabled and the fallen may be safeguarded."

IN MEMORIAM
In loving memory of Estelle Mary Roche, dearly beloved wife of Malcolm McDonald of Glenfanning, who departed this life on May 8th, 1925, in her 31st year. May her soul rest in peace.
Softly falls the evening shadows O'er the churchyard on the hill, Wherein rests our dear departed Silently and cold and still.
Sweetest voice like heavenly music All our childish griefs to stay, Loving hands once filled with duties Folded now and laid away.
Vain were all our earthly efforts To restore our fading flower, Slowly, surely, unrelenting Death proclaimed the parting hour.
Loving wife and gentle mother, Saddened are our hearts today, But there shines the "silver lining" It will help our grief away.

Violin Recital by The Pupils of Miss Hornby

Before a large audience in the League of the Cross Hall, the pupils in violin music of Miss Kathleen Hornby gave last night their first annual recital, and rendered a program which though of some length, did not lack in merit in any of its numbers, and to judge from the applause given, was found most enjoyable by those present.
In their rendition of the different numbers the pupils reflected great credit on the training they have undergone, and proved as well that there is no dearth of true musical talent in this city.
Another pleasing feature of the program was the rendition of several vocal numbers by Miss Lucy Blanchard.
The program rendered was as follows:

King Government
of some groups in the House to score against the government. "If that is the motive of the opposition the sooner they score the better," declared the Premier.
Mr. King pointed out that the end of the session had not yet been reached and that it was impossible for members of the opposition to determine whether or not the government would carry out all its pledges, made in the speech from the throne, or not. There was only one item mentioned in that speech which the government had not yet implemented by legislation. That was the natural resources bill.
As for the session having lasted too long, with very little accomplished, Mr. King thought the opposition was chiefly to blame for that. It had delayed public business on several occasions beginning with nearly a month's debate on the question of whether the government should hold office or not.
Not Easy to Carry on Says King
Dr. Manion—"The other side debated that just as much as we."
Mr. King—"It has not been easy for the government to carry on this session."
Opposition members—"Hear hear."
"But I will say that no other group in this House would have been able to carry on at all."
The motion under discussion was simply a motion of non-confidence against the government. If it carried the government would have to consider the next steps to be taken.
There was a chorus of laughter at this point.

Premier King added that "if this government does not enjoy the confidence of this House it will lose no time in asking for dissolution and for an appeal from this House to the country."
Progressive Wants Government to Carry Out Promises
W. T. Lucas, Progressive, Kamloops, followed. He was greeted with applause from the Conservative benches. He had intended to bring up before the session was ended the question of "certain promises in the speech from the throne not being carried out." The Alberta resources he would have brought up specifically, he said, if it had not already been on the order paper.
At the beginning of the session he did not see eyes to eye with a majority of his colleagues in the matter of supporting the government. Certain objections that he had raised had been overruled by his own group but he made this stand, namely that he was sent to Ottawa to obtain certain things for the West, if the government would carry out its promises in the speech from the throne he would support the government.
Mr. Lucas was going on to say that "had it not been for an agreement signed on January 9 this year, the government would have been in power to start with," when Premier King asked what signed agreement he referred to.

Prepared to Support Resolution
Mr. Lucas—"I mean the agreement between the Dominion of Canada and the Province of Alberta promising the return of the natural resources. It was signed by Hon. Ernest Lapointe and Hon. Charles Stewart, for the Federal Government and Premier Brownlee and W. W. Smith on behalf of the province."
Premier King said that there was a supplementary agreement which was just as significant.
Mr. Lucas continued, saying that members from Alberta felt that this question was one which should be solved before they returned to their province. "I am prepared to support the resolution, he said.

Minister of Finance
Hon. J. A. Robb, Minister of Finance, said that the government realized what was behind the resolution. Clearly the question which had been discussed most in the House since the session opened was high and low tariff. "It was on that subject that hon. gentlemen opposite challenged our right to carry on, but we gave our answer when we brought down the budget on April 15. I submit that the country is not going to be fooled by the resolution and the sooner we have a vote and know where we stand the better."

Government Failed to Implement Promises
Rt. Hon. Arthur Meighen, leader of the Opposition, said that the method of defence of the Minister of Finance would not surprise him. The amendment declared that because of the failure to implement its promises in the speech from the throne the government had no longer the confidence of parliament.
When the House of Commons was summoned in January the Prime Minister had said it was solely for the purpose of deciding who had the confidence of parliament, but in order to impair the freedom of parliament a new list of pledges was offered to members who had defeated government candidates in the election. They were told that if they dared to vote against the government they would lose the legislation. Because of these circumstances the government's failure to carry out its pledges was more serious. Not one of the major promises of the speech from the throne had yet passed parliament. Had the government done anything to complete the Hudson Bay Railway forthwith.
The Minister of Finance, looking across at his erstwhile friends, the Progressives had said, "if you dare to vote against us you will vote for higher and higher tariff."
Childish Address of Finance Minister
"I wonder if a more childish address was ever made in parliament?" continued Mr. Meighen. After the echoes of the government's tariff reductions had died away and in the silence of the night the Minister of Finance had returned to the House and moved for the restoration of the auto-

He and his Prime Minister believe that they are deceiving the country by calling duties excise. He put the automobile industry back where it was so far as protection was concerned.
Some member called out that automobiles were cheaper now.

Cheaper Autos at Expense of Clothes
"He made automobiles cheaper at the expense of clothes. Cheaper automobiles at the expense of clothes on the workingman's back." The lowered prices on automobiles meant lowered revenues for Canada. "This is the last phase of Liberalism in Canada," said Mr. Meighen.

Another Broken Promise
The government had promised amendments to the Dominion Elections Act. No amendments had been introduced.
Premier King here interjected that the government earlier in the session had informed the House that it did not contemplate an election, but if honorable members desired amendments to the Election Act they would be brought in at the present session. "And so they will," added the Prime Minister.

Obtained Support by False Promise
Turning to the natural resources Mr. Meighen said that members of the House knew that one of the chief factors which rested in the majority of the government or the first division in the House of Commons was its pledge to bring in legislation providing for the return of these resources. The Prime Minister now said he had put a resolution on the order paper and therefore the House should be satisfied. But the fact remained that the government had obtained its support by giving a pledge which it had not fulfilled.
That pledge was the chief factor in securing a majority by which the government retained power. The government had obtained its support on the strength of an agreement with the province of Alberta to return to that province its natural resources. Whether or not this agreement was tabled at the time of the division was immaterial, but if honorable members many members of the House with whom the government had discussed it.
Hon. Lucien Cannon, Solicitor General, said that the agreement had been amended by the Alberta government. He asked Mr. Meighen if he would be prepared to support the amendment.
The opposition leader retorted that Hon. Ernest Lapointe, Minister of Justice, had just been on his feet protesting that there should be no discussion of this matter.
Mr. Cannon replied that he had not been in the Chamber earlier in the debate.

Government of Compromise and Intrigue
The government could not bring forward a strong, clear policy, Mr. Meighen said. This was a government of compromise, of compromise of intrigue. Its solemn pledges were today ruthlessly cast aside. The Prime Minister threatened dissolution and a general election. This was the sword that was held over the members. He reminded the Prime Minister that the question of dissolution was not his prerogative.

The Premier's Threat
The government, concluded Mr. Meighen, had fought the election and had taken office on certain principles. The campaign had been run according to the government's method by officials appointed by the government. The revelations concerning Peace River and elsewhere should, he thought, make the government hesitate to ask to be placed in charge of election machinery again. The Prime Minister's threat to dissolve parliament, was deliberately calculated, he said, "to frighten the few who are timid." All such talk was beside the mark. The only thing to be considered now was that if the government were afraid to carry out its avowed policy it could not hope to hold parliament and the country, and it should resign.

Bourassa Speaks
Henri Bourassa, Independent, LaBelle, said he could not remember a single session when all the programs contained in the speech from the throne had been carried out. Therefore, that was not the real issue. It was a question really, as it had been at the beginning of the session, of whether Liberals or Conservatives should be in power. He did not believe that any member who had found himself unable to support Conservative policy could possibly support this resolution.

Progressive Ceases His Support
A. M. Boutilier, Prog. Vegreville, said that coming from Alberta he was naturally deeply interested in the subject before the House. When the Prime Minister had announced that the Alberta resources measure would not be proceeded with he was disappointed. "I felt that any responsibility I had in supporting the government ceased at that moment. I am in full accord with the sentiments expressed by the member from Camrose (Mr. Lucas).
