WILL HAVE FIRST CLASS DRY DOCK

Leading up to the subject of the dry dock, Mr. Borden made an important statement of policy regarding maritime matters. "It is not difficult to understand that the St. Lawrence route cannot hold its own in competition with other routes unless vessels of the largest tonnage can be docked and repaired in case of necessity. The conditions of the past, in which at least a score of the large liners sailing to the St. Lawrence could not be accommodated in any available dock, must be remedied. Accordingly, the Government have undertaken the construction at Lauzon of one of the largest and finest dry docks in the world. According to a statement compiled by the experts of the Department of Public Works, no larger dock is either in existence or in contemplation in any British or American port than that which will be commenced within the limits of Quebec harbor. Last year in London we sought and obtained information as to the requirements of the Admiralty in respect of the character, the dimensions, and the possible uses of such a dock. The information thus gathered was of great value and it has been acted upon in determining the size and character of this dock, which primarily will be utilized for commercial purposes to the marked advantage of the St. Lawrence route, but which will also be capable of use in time of need for the purposes of the Admiralty."
