THE GREEN SHADOW

DR. MOFFETT'S FACE

As he spoke, the doctor's arm came upward. He held the pistol pointed straight at the visitor. The latter had dropped his arms, releasing the girl from his embrace, and now he stood in front of her, looking straight and smilingly into the greenish blur that was all he could see of Moffett's face.

"Your noble countenance seems to be in eclipse, doctor," he remarked pleasantly.

"You will be in eclipse before long," remarked Moffett grimly. "It was very clear, Dale. I never suspected—but then I thought Miss Castle acted a bit queer when you wound your paternal arm around her. Maybe the paternal part of it wasn't convincing. Anyway, you whispered in her ear, and she gave a start. I almost suspected something then. Will you tell me how you got out of jail?"

"I was never there. I shun jails, doctor. I was fortunately saved from that sad experience."

"Saved? How? By whom?"

"By a few thunderclaps. You see, there was no thunder the night Miss Conway was murdered. But it did thunder last night, while you framed up the evidence against me. There was enough thunder to curdle every pitcher of cream in New York. That's where you made a mistake."

Evidently Dr. Moffett did not quite understand. "It doesn't matter," he declared. "It would have been better for you if you had gone to jail."

"That sounds ominous."

"It is just as ominous as it sounds. I think you are bluffing, Dale. I don't believe you brought any policemen with you. The police and the Picaroon usually travel separate paths. But if you did—there was a blurry motion of a hand, and the pistol rose a trifle higher—"If you did," Dr. Moffett added, "your career ends right there."

The Picaroon made a wry face. "That's an awfully unpleasant thought. I am deeply devoted to my career—"

"The career of a thief!"

"You're mistaken, doctor. Nothing so vulgar. I'm a collector."

"A collector of other people's jewelry!"

"No, a collector of autographs and rare books—first editions and such things. It's a pleasant hobby. You ought to cultivate it. It's far more agreeable than murdering people."

"I'll consider your advice."

The Picaroon glanced at his watch. "They are a little late," he observed. "Maybe their watches are slow."

A pair of eyes blazed at him out of the greenish haze. "I still think you are bluffing," Moffett declared.

"However, if any strangers come to the gate, I shall know it instantly. A gong will give me warning. The moment it rings I'll put a bullet through your heart."

A gasp sounded behind the Picaroon's back.

"Through my heart, eh?" He appeared to consider. "Not such a bad idea. It's a quick death, and almost painless. If shoot you must, please shoot straight. I should hate to be mugged up. Being a physician you know, I suppose, on which side my heart is?"

"I do," said Moffett grimly, "and I promise to shoot straight."

"Thanks. Awfully decent of you. Don't forget, doctor."

"Don't worry. I shan't forget. It's the custom to humor people who haven't long to live. I'll humor you by aiming straight at your heart."

"Thanks. Do you know, doctor, I picked up a most curious edition of Lobeira's Amadis of Gaul the other day. As a mark of my appreciation I'll will it to you."

"Oh, thanks," said the doctor dryly. "The only question is how I am to mention you in my will. Shall I designate you as Dr. Moffett or by your real name?"

"Again the doctor's eye blazed at him out of the green blur. "You think you know my real name?"

"Oh, yes. I discovered it the morning following your visit to my apartment. Surely you haven't forgotten."

"That was the night you flashed a green light in my face and gave me a wallop on the jaw. Not that I bear you any hard feelings on that score. I dropped my grievances when my jaw dropped back to its normal size."

"Oh," said Dr. Moffett in a soft and curious tone. "So you think you know whom I am, do you?"

"Yes," said Dale. He cast a glance over his shoulder at the white-faced girl standing behind him. He felt a wrench at his heart. She must know some time. Why not now?

As if she had construed his backward glance as a question, the girl finally spoke. "I know, too," she declared. "I saw his face."

Dale whirled round. "You—you saw?" he stammered. "Then you know?"

She nodded. He marveled at the casualness of her reply. He had feared the discovery would temporarily crush her, but instead she seemed to bear up amazingly well.

Perhaps her infatuation had not been as deep as he had feared.

"Yes, Miss Castle knows," said the doctor in a queer voice.

With a start Dale swung round again. The four words had been spoken in a way that sent a chill through his being. In a moment Moffett's meaning was terrifyingly clear. The doctor's safety demanded that she should be silenced. She had signed her own death warrant when she looked into his face.

"Yes, Miss Castle knows," the doctor added, "but I don't think you do."

"Oh, yes," Dale controlled his sharp, tumultuous sensations. "Your left sleeve is empty, isn't it? I can't see very well in this light, but—"

"Yes, Ainsworth, your left sleeve." Dale began, but even as he spoke a sense of bewilderment crowded his brain.

"Ainsworth?" the girl exclaimed in a voice of stupefaction. "Why, how ridiculous! You don't think—"

Moffett's laugh interrupted her. "What an amusing misapprehension!"

"If you are not Ainsworth," said The Picaroon lamely, "who are you?"

Before the doctor could reply a loud gong sounded somewhere in the house. Axelson, standing near the door, gave a sharp exclamation. For an instant the pistol wavered in Moffett's hand.

"Who am I?" he echoed ironically. "That is something you will never know. Through the heart, did you say?"

The girl screamed. There came a sharp crack. A muffled cry of horror rang out, and Adele shrank away, hands clasped against her white cheeks.

NEW ANNAN AND VICINITY

Mr. Louis Mosse was a recent visitor to Long River.

Mr. and Mrs. Wilyiam Mill, Clermont, were in the city Friday, while their small son was operated on for enlarged tonsils and adenoids in the Prince County Hospital. Many friends of the little sufferer hope that in a short time he will have completely recovered.

The blueberry crop in most places is quite plentiful and many are taking advantage of the luscious fruit.

The New Annan Races, which took place Wednesday, July 31, was much enjoyed and was a greater success than ever.

The District Convention of the Women's Institutes met in Traveler's Rest Monday afternoon and evening, August 5th, and was quite largely attended. In the evening a very interesting program was carried out of numbers furnished by each of the Institutes concerned. A pleasing and well rendered discourse by Hon. W. M. Lea on his trip to the Old Country was very interesting and furnished helpful hints to those who were less privileged to take the trip. After votes of thanks were tendered past officers, performers, etc., etc., the National Anthem closed the meeting.

Mrs. S. Gay, Summerside, was a recent guest of Mrs. Chester Tuplin of this place.

Miss Owen Spriggs, daughter of Rev. G. T. Spriggs, Kensington, was a recent guest of Mr. and Mrs. Jabes Mill.

Mr. and Mrs. Jabes Mill, Miss Mammie Mill and Mr. Harold Mill, motored to the city Friday.

"He's in the food business you say?" "Yep—does nothing but eat."

"Jack is suing for my hand." "Why don't you settle out of court?"

Dr. Sheard said: "The eyes are as lazy as any part of the body and need exercise. Like other parts, also, they can adapt themselves to the need of the modern world." He said the "movies" were not injurious to the eyes. The motor car, though, brings with it a strain on the eyes which was not known in the old days of the horse. "Driving a car is a continual strain on the eye," the doctor said, "but people are less apt driving now than they used to be, and there is no appreciable harm done. The sort-sighted driver is often safer than the man who takes long chances."

Summer Complaints Kill Little Ones

At the first sign of illness during the hot weather give the little ones Baby's Own Tablets or in a few hours he may be beyond aid. These Tablets will prevent summer complaints if given occasionally to the well child, and will promptly relieve these troubles if they come on suddenly. Baby's Own Tablets should always be kept in every home where there are young children. There is no other medicine as good and the mother has the guarantee that they are absolutely safe. They are sold by all druggists or will be mailed on receipt of price, 35c per box, by The Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.
