What Every Widow Knows

CHAPTER 34

WHEREIN IT TAKES THREE TO MAKE A QUARREL

Like most persons who rarely allow themselves to act on impulse Jimmie Gordon found himself much regretting that he had departed from his usual habits on the occasion when he blundered into Dexter Hatch's room shortly after midnight, with the abrupt demand that Hatch should go back to Molly Benedict's for the excited dog.

He found Dexter's maddening calm irritating to say the least.

Jim was forced to stand like a complaining schoolboy while Dexter put through a telephone call to Molly. And most unsatisfactory did he find the "listening in" on their conversation.

Dexter's way of putting things was blunt to say the least.

"Mrs. Benedict? Sorry to disturb you—Gordon is here—telling me about how Pard chewed him up—he thinks I'd better run back to your house and take the dog away—"

Then followed a long pause wherein Jimmie Dexter listening to Molly's answer. It didn't make Jimmie feel exactly comfortable as he observed that a slow smile was breaking over Dexter's usually expressionless face.

"Well, I'd be glad to go get him—" Dexter finally began.

Evidently Molly had interrupted him for again Dexter leaned back to listen, with the smile growing steadily broader.

"Can't say how sorry I am—or how surprised. First time he ever showed that trait. Been pretty steady for a young dog. I — well, perhaps you'd like to speak to Gordon—"

Jimmie took the receiver from Dexter's hand. He was forced to stand awkwardly while he listened, and only long training over the poker table could keep his face expressionless as he caught Molly's delicious staccato saying:

"No, I don't want to speak to Jimmie! And I'm awfully cross with him for running to you about Pard. It was entirely my fault that the dog jumped! You know what a silly habit I have of—well—sort of squealing sometimes—and something Jimmie said I—er—squealed out about—sort of a teensy scream—and it was that that made Pard jump of course—and his paw struck Jim's face and that got Jimmie excited. But the dear old doggie is perfectly quiet now, I—er—well, first we locked him in the kitchen but after Jimmie went I let him out and he's lying right beside my bed, as peaceable as an old lamb. It's a shame Jimmie's face was scratched. I feel so sorry about that but—"

"Don't need to worry about my face at all, Molly," Jim interrupted. "It was only because I was distressed about leaving you alone with the dog that I came down here. Hatch is perfectly willing to take the dog away. I have a car here and it seems to me that the sensible thing for everybody concerned is to leave the dog with Mr. Hatch, who probably understands him."

"Jim, you dear old fuss budget!" Molly's exasperation at the sound of his voice certainly was not flattering! "Whatever possessed you to do such a silly thing as to go to Mr. Hatch! I know his feelings will be hurt! And you know perfectly well that dog wasn't to blame—that it was all my fault—only, a little bit yours! For heavens sake, tell Mr. Hatch I'm perfectly all right and that the dog is all right and that you're all right only you got excited. Oh, do go home, like a lamb, and put some iodine on your face—and—and forget it! And—will you let me speak to Mr. Hatch, please?"

"I will not," said Jim through half-shut lips. "Good night, my dear—" he had the audacity to add, "Good night and sweet dreams. Glad the pup has quieted down, I'll see you in the morning—"

He hung up the receiver exulting in the fact that Molly didn't know where he and Hatch really were. He turned to Hatch with an assumption of casual manner.

"Sorry I suggested taking the dog away tonight," he murmured icily. "But understand this, I shall expect you to do so in the morning no matter what Molly says. She has the tenderest heart and the most sensitive nature of anybody I ever knew. She simply doesn't want to hurt your feelings in the matter. But the dog evidently has a bad streak in him that you did not suspect—they sometimes develop those things you know—and I shan't rest until I know that he is gone—"

Dexter sat on the edge of his rumpled bed eyeing Gordon thoughtfully. He looked disconcertingly big in his pajamas.

"Just what relation are you to Mrs. Benedict?" he asked abrutly.

"Molly has practically no near relatives," Jimmie replied stiffly. "I am her oldest and closest friend—I have been looking after her for some time—"

"Well, I don't know—" Dexter seemd to be merely thinking aloud. "It strikes me you've no real call to say what I shall or shant do—if Mrs. Benedict tells me to take Pard I will but otherwise—"

"Heavens! Man!" Jim ejaculated hotly. "Haven't I just been explaining to you that she wants the dog to go but is simply being tactful?"

Dexter yawned largely.

Jimmie's temper exploded.

"Look here!" he began hotly. "If that dog isn't taken away the first thing tomorrow morning—"

"You wan't be able to do anything about it," Dexter finished for him. "I tell you again, I'm taking no orders from you about that dog or anything else. It's entirely a matter for Mrs. Benedict to decide. I'm not starting any quarrel with you, you understand, and I don't believe the dog was—they say it takes two to start a scrap you know. So I don't see how you're going to get up any three-cornered argument at this time of night seeing that neither Mrs. Benedict or I want to indulge in any excitement. She told me herself that Pard was perfectly quiet now. I'm thinking you'd do well to follow his example—" he grinned, a most irritating grin.

Jimmie's parting shot was rather childish, considering his age and his experience.

"You'll find there's three in this scrap, all right! I repeat that I expect you to take that dog away the first thing in the morning and I shall be at Mrs. Benedict's to see that you do! If you do not I shall have him sent away, regardless of what she says."

He banged the door behind him, leaving a somewhat bewildered Dexter whose jaws were set defiantly.

"Looks like that cuss and me were heading toward a mixup someday soon—unless the little lady tells me to take that dog back home—" he soliliquized.

No More Colds

"Keep the nasal passages well lubricated," say medical men, "and you'll prevent cold germs from lodging there." The most effective way is to sniff a little 'Vaseline' Petroleum Jelly into the nostrils at bed time. It spreads over the delicate membranes and wards off any irritation. If your throat feels ticklish, a spoonful taken internally will be a big help. Tasteless, soothing, absolutely pure. Buy a jar.

CUMBERLAND HILL WOMEN'S INSTITUTE

The regular monthly meeting of the Cumberland Hill Women's Institute was held at the home of Mrs. J. J. MacDonald on March 14.

The meeting opened by the singing of the Institute Ode followed by the Creed repeated in unison. There were eight members in attendance. Roll call was answered by Irish jokes. The minutes of the previous meeting were read and adopted.

It was moved and seconded that the Institute purchase a length of pipe for the school stove. It was decided to begin answering the questionaires at the next meeting. The program for the evening consisted of a Gaelic song by Mrs. J. M. MacLeod and instrumental music by Miss Isabel Campbell and Miss Georgie Matheson. The April meeting is to be held at the home of Miss Myra Hunter if weather proves favorable. Roll call is to be answered by paying a nickle. The meeting closed by singing the National Anthem after which a dainty lunch was served by the hostes.

Sudden Death Of Capt. Foote

YARMOUTH, N. S., March 27—Captain Frank Foote, who commanded many a tall wind-ship during a long career on the sea, died at his home here today, aged 76.

Death came as a result of a fall down a long flight of stairs last Thursday. The Captain, who had a weak ligament, reached the top of the stairway when the ligament broke and he toppled backwards. The shock affected his heart and his condition grew steadily worse.

Captain Foote, whose father before him was a skipper of sailing vessels, went to sea at the age of 17. For some years he commanded cocanut carriers and later superintended cocoanut shipments from a Honduras plantation for the Franklin Barker Company of New York. He retired about 15 years ago and returned to Yarmouth.
