Mrs. Fred Bingham, Swift Current, Sask., writes: "I was bothered with palpitation of the heart, and my nerves were so bad I could not sleep. I was getting desperate and confided my trouble to a friend who recommended me to use Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills. I purchased a box and got such relief I would gladly recommend them to all who are troubled as I was."

ASHES of ROSES

A Romance of Today By Joanna Cannan

"I don't really care a bit about jewellery," mused Patricia. "You won't find me at all an expensive wife. Except in the matter of nags. If Daddy really does give us Long Petworth, we shall be able to keep as many gesses as the biscuits will run to. It will be rather fun when we're married, won't it, Geoff?"

"Yes," replied the prospective bridegroom temperately. "We'll have lots of people to stay," planned Patricia. "We'll fill up the house with a really cheery crowd. I think it would be awful to sit one at each end of the table every night, don't you?"

"Awful," said Geoffrey with feeling, and into his mind came the thought of the evenings he had imagined would be so beautiful, the evenings in the rose-covered cottage all alone with Pat. He was not an imaginative boy, but in the moments that followed, two visions passed before his inward eye, the first a vision of small June roses about an open lattice, the second, a vision of the hall at Long Petworth filled with a really cheery crowd.

"I like lots of people," babbled Patricia. "Good thing that you do, too. It would be awful to marry a novelist or someone like that who didn't like to be disturbed. Look, there's Daddy coming for me! He's thinking of his turkey and plum-pudding, I expect."

CHAPTER XV. COLONEL MILLER

Geoffrey travelled back to Glasgow by night and arrived at St. Enoch's station in the bitter chill of a wet December dawn. After the brisk, frosty air at Hemshott, after the clean woods and the clear winter landscape, very dreary were the damp and the dark of the great city and her lighted, daytime streets. Geoffrey sat in the office and looked across to the grimy facade of the mean building opposite, and heartily wished himself back on the ice of Dimpley Lake with Pat. When he got back to Inverary Mansions in the evening, it was a relief to sit down and write to her, to tell her how it was still raining in Glasgow, how awful Inverary Mansions were after Hemshott, how he wished that he was skating with her at Dimpley, what an enjoyable week-end it had been, how he hoped that she would write to him soon.

Patricia was delighted with his letter. It was affectionate without being sentimental. She sat down at once to reply to it, and told him how the frost had broken, how the ice had melted, how Sally's paw was better and Bruo's tendon, how Colonel Delaune's Brown Friar had come to grief out exercising on the Eastleigh Sorrel Road. She hoped that Geoffrey would be coming down to Hemshott again soon, and was his as ever, Pat. Geoffrey read the letter at breakfast and when he had finished the evening paper, having nothing else to read, he filled up his sheet of note-paper, he was able to tell Patricia that he had read her interesting letter twice.

John Gilmour was delighted to hear from Sir Hugh Lysarde that Geoffrey was such an excellent correspondent, and he saw with approval the large sapphire engagement ring which Geoffrey despatched so promptly. He did not realise that it was better to sit down and write to Pat and take the letter out to post than to sit in the dismal lounge staring in front of you, or that the intolerable boredom of a luncheon hour had been soled by the selection of the ring.

For three months Geoffrey wrote four or five times a week to Patricia, then came April weather, and summer time. It was possible to play hard court tennis after work, with Lesley and other young men, who were only too pleased to include a player of Geoffrey's standing in their games. On Sunday evenings he played a second round of golf. Only when it was hopelessly wet, did he sit down now to write to Patricia. Her letters, however, arrived with the same frequency. Their subject matter had changed from hunting to tennis and bathing, that was all. In July she wrote to tell him that she was coming to stay with her cousins at Castle Erle on the Ayrshire coast, and that Mrs. Olliphant had commissioned her to invite him there for the first week-end of her stay.

Geoffrey was not altogether pleased with the invitation. He had fixed up a particularly interesting golf match for the Sunday of that week-end, and, not in the best of tempers, travelled out to Castle Erle on Friday evening after work. Castle Erle stands on the sea shore between the Ayrshire hills and the waters of the Firth of Clyde. The view from its many windows is a lovely one. Across the Fair's roads, lie the purple Cumbræ is-

Charlottetown School Of Music

HEARTZ MEMORIAL HALL

Starting with the New Year, the Charlottetown School of Music will organize classes in "sight singing" and "voice culture" for children, and invites the co-operation of all parents in their endeavour to do something of permanent value in a musical way for the youth of our city. These classes will be limited in number to twelve pupils in each group and will be conducted after school hours. Boys from eight to thirteen years of age will be taken together. Girls from eight to twelve years and from twelve to fifteen years will form separate groups. Each group will have two lessons of half-hour duration per week, and the charge will be quite a nominal one, namely one dollar ($1.00) per month payable in advance. The method of instruction will be that known as the "Dual Notation Course"—a combination of "Tonic Solfa" and "Staff Notations." Our instructor, Mr. A. Roy Kendall, L. R. M., A. A. G. O. has had many years' experience in this work, and is particularly fitted to give the very best service to those who decide to take advantage of these classes. Pupils may enroll any time before January 9th. As each pupil will be tested as to natural musical ability before being admitted to these classes it will be wise for prospective pupils to interview Mr. Kendall early.

We also wish to announce that beginners in pianoforte playing (children) will be given a special rate for individual lessons after the New Year. For those desiring to prepare for a diploma in piano playing we might add that the school is now in affiliation with the Mt. Allison Conservatory of Music and examinations will be conducted by this body in Charlottetown, provided sufficient pupils present themselves.

INDULGENCE VERSUS ABSTINENCE

It would be extremely interesting to read the comments of the average citizen of this province on the two following contradictory statements. The first is by Walter Lippman, a brilliant American journalist who contributes a column to several leading papers of the highest type. "Beer would be a great help in fighting off the mental depression which afflicts great multitudes who are bored and discouraged, and it is an unnecessary cruelty to withhold it in the winter which we face. Beer is nourishing, consoling, and warming, and it should be made available as soon as possible."

The second is by Sir George E. Foster, one of Canada's most distinguished statesmen and orators, speaking out of a personal experience covering 80 years. "My conclusion from personal experience is

LITTLE THINGS

It takes a little muscle and it takes a little grit. A little true ambition with a little bit of wit— It's not the "biggest" things that count and make the "biggest" show; It's the little things that people do that makes the o'd world go.

A little bit of smiling, and a little sunny chat, A little bit of courage to a comrade slipping back; It's not the "biggest" things that count and make the "biggest" show, It's the little things that people do that makes this old world go.

It takes a kindly action and it takes a word of cheer To fill a life with sunshine and to drive away a tear. Great things are not the "biggest" things that make the "biggest" show, It's the little things that we may do that makes this old world go.

THE OXFORD GROUP MOVEMENT—WHAT DOES IT STAND FOR?

So much is being said and written about "The Oxford Group Movement" that it is important that the exact facts should be set forth. The following extracts, taken from a pamphlet, entitled "The Oxford Group—A First Century Christian Fellowship," by F. W. Rowlands, B. A., may be helpful in clearing up some misunderstandings:

"It is not a new sect, nor even a new organization, but a movement of the Spirit of God in close touch with the Churches, the chief characteristic of which is life-changing through personal testimony. The term 'life-changing' is comprehensive and challenging. The fact is we need changing, churchgoers as well as non-churchgoers. A recent writer in 'The Times' said, 'Our instant need to day is an inflow of the Spirit transforming, as in the first days, not methods nor mechanism, but men.' The world is crying out in this day of her travail for changed men and women."

"It has pleased God to use these Groups to bring about revolutionary changes in all sorts and conditions of persons. Change in the individual in his relation to Christ first of all, and then in all other relationships, personal, domestic, business, social, racial and international."

"The changes are perhaps most marked when they occur in people who hitherto have made very little profession of religion. Young men and women in the universities—or elsewhere, who in the midst of 'a good time' have met with Christ, and have surrendered their lives to Him and to His service. People who called themselves 'Atheists' or 'Agnostics,' but were conscious of needs and found that Christ could meet them. People who in these difficult days were in perplexity and despair, but have found that Christ is the solution of their problems. People to whom religion meant simply that which was dull and formal, but who have found in Christ deliverance from things of which they were at heart ashamed, and who experience a great adventure in bringing others to Him. The changes taking place among church-going folk, if less spectacular, are no less revolutionary. People who, in spite of all their religious upbringing and all their knowledge of the Bible, have gone year after year with the same failures—worry, pride, selfplaining, fault finding, irritability, and many other things—have found release through the redemption of Christ and, with it, new joy and power to bring deliverance to others. Busy Church and social workers (yes, and ministers of religion, too) who, in spite of all their zeal, have touched only the outside of things, have found in this new relationship to Christ a power and effectiveness which were not there before."

"One of the most marked effects of these personal changes is the readjustment of family relationships. Domestic inharmonies in varying degrees is perhaps one of the commonest symptoms of the universal disease of sin. In some cases, it may be nothing more than small frictions and incompatibilities, each member of the family going his or her way. In others it results in one or more members of the family finding it impossible to live at home. In others again it means real tragedy. Yet one of the most frequently heard testimonies of those who have been 'changed' is that 'it has made all the difference in our home.' Husbands and wives who were on the point of separation have entered into new relationship and begun their married life over again. Daughters have found that the mother could be a real friend and confidante. Parents have come to know their children as they never knew them before, and children who had felt 'out of it' at home now for the first time feel that they really belong to the family. No less revolutionary changes are taking place in business life. To conduct a business on the basis of absolute honesty, daily surrender to God and the guidance of the Holy Spirit may sound Utopian, but this is what is happening. How are these changes being wrought? Simply through personal testimony to Jesus Christ, the great Deliverer, by those who have been changed. The testimony is twofold. The life testifies that a change has taken place; the lips testify that the change is due to Christ and to Him only."

"There is without doubt a movement of the Spirit of God in our midst, and it brings an insistent challenge to the Churches and to every individual Christian. Some 1900 years ago, when the narrow world of Palestine was faced with a crisis similar to that of the world today, a few people who had been scanning the horizon for signs of a coming deliverer made a Great Discovery. They went about among their friends saying, with an enthusiasm which could not be pent up, 'We have found Christ. Through this discovery and their witness to it (or rather to Him) the world, not only of Palestine but of Greece and Rome, got a lease of life. The challenge came to us to do the same. Are we ready to meet the challenge?' —M. P.
