SPRINGTIME MEDITATIONS

There is a time all nature seems to rest; When brooks, and birds, and every living thing, Untie their varied ripples, trills, and tones, To join in merry, merry song of spring. Fair springtime! Mid your joyous harmonies, There is a plaintive chord you make resound; While warmth and freshness steal earth's mantle white, And tenderly unveil the sodden mound. Where lie, the forms of those so near and dear, Who lived short time ago, the same as we Do now, and living, shared life's joys and tears, Till death, unbidden, set their spirits free. A little longer watching—longer waiting— A little patience blended well, before The buds, the blades, the blossoms re-appear— Fresh symbols of the life forevermore! —Mrs. E. Holden H. McClure.
