On a moonlight skating party do not wander out of sight of the main group. In the event of a break through the victim should spread his arms on the solid ice. Kick the feet to the surface as in swimming. Try to lean well forward flattening the body as much as possible in an effort to work forward onto the ice. (This is a most difficult feat even with the use of hand spikes). As soon as the hips are on the ice, roll away from the danger area. Rescuers should use a pole, branch of a tree, plank, ladder or rope to reach the victim. If a rope is used have a loop in the end thrown to the victim. He can slip his hands through the loop. Rescuers should remember to spread their weight by lying down. If there is no equipment available a human chain can be formed and the chain worms its way forward.

fatigue (tiredness) worse, often relieves it."

It is easily understood how an individual who thinks he has an ailment, when none exists, worries just as much as if a disease were present and what makes him more worried and upset is that he can expect no sympathy from family or friends. Neurosis which tires as much as disease itself, is a conflict between the individual and society, whereas disease is a conflict between the individual and Nature.

TORONTO TO LOSE FAMILIAR HORSES

TORONTO, Jan. 16 — (CP) — Only six of the Canadian National Railways' 116 express wagon horses are still on Toronto streets. "And for them it's a day-to-day proposition," George Fitzsimmons said. The railways' mechanization plans spell the end of the horse-drawn express wagon fleet.

Fitzsimmons who is in charge of the C. N. R. stables here, said it will be a sad day for the men who used to drive Bell, Old Joe or Kay on their leisurely routes about the city.

"Who ever saw a pretty girl stop to pat a truck?" asked Tomny Wheeler, a veteran stableman. "It's too bad they have to go."

Earl Maddon who has been driving horses off and on for 35 years made this point: "The traffic cop is more likely to hand a horse a lump of sugar than a parking ticket."

HARBOR SEAL HUNTING PROFITABLE SIDELINE

HALIFAX, Jan. 16 — (CP) — Nova Scotia's inshore fishermen have a profitable sideline — destroying harbor seals. So far this year they have collected $4,500 in bounties for destroying 900 seals.

Until this year, all a fisherman had to do to collect a $5 bounty was to present a seal's snout to the handiest fish inspector. However, some fishermen in the Cape Breton Island area decided a seal was a seal, and killed a different type of mammal, which was on the protected list. Though illegal, it was profitable.

So now the provincial government pays out the bounty only to those producing a harbor seal's jaw. Fish inspectors can tell by the teeth formation if the fisherman has killed the right speckler.

Although Nova Scotia fishermen don't make harbor seal hunting a full-time job, many pick up considerable income from the sideline. One man shot as many as 20 seals in a day.
