THE Street Committee of the Town Council have been making strong efforts to have merchants and others discontinue the habit of throwing garbage where it will not become a nuisance. The streets are now covered with paper, etc. which is allowed to be blown from dockyards from along the wharves and other places and which might easily be buried. The council is likely to pass a by-law to compel people to burn such rubbish so that the trouble might be obviated. As it is while such a practice as throwing paper where it is liable to be blown in the public thoroughfare is allowed to continue, the street men will be kept busy cleaning up the trash.

The Umbrella 100 Years Ago.

In the reprints from its own columns of 100 years ago. The London Times recently reproduced a speech of Sheridan's at a time when the new-fangled umbrella was an object of mirth in the House of Commons: "For instance, sir," said Mr. Sheridan, "you whom I have the honor to address might dispense with the expensive splendor of that elegant house which is now building for you, and all the state attached to your official suite, whenever you are to obey the orders of this House; in going up to present an address to His Majesty you will have no occasion to take up with you that shining bauble which is here the symbol of your power, nor to travel in that splendid gewgaw the gilded coach, at present an appendage of your office. You have only to walk up to St. James', wrap up in your virtues and a warm surcoat, and if it should rain you will have the privilege of carrying an umbrella. (Bursts of laughter.) There will be no occasion for all the state attached to the movements of your judges on circuit; they can travel in the mail coaches, and the bar move as outside passengers, if they should not prefer the salutary exercise of walking. (Repeated laughter.)"

Mr. Chamberlain Quoted Poetry.

When Joseph Chamberlain was a Liberal a good many years ago, he made a speech at Gloucester, England, in which the future Colonial Secretary quoted a nursery rhyme with great effect. Mr. Chamberlain was criticising Lord Beaconsfield and Lord Salisbury on their return from Berlin. One of them had used the word "if" a good many times in the course of a speech explaining their action. "It reminds me," said Mr. Chamberlain, "of a rhyme I learned from my nurse:

"If all the seas were bread and cheese,
If all the rivers were ink,
If all the lakes were currant cakes,
What should we have to drink?"

The effect of this apposite nonsense on the audience was tremendous, and the quotation is ranked as one of the great oratorical hits of the Birmingham statesman's life.

Successful Resuscitation.

There are still undeveloped possibilities in electricity. A man in an apparently moribund condition was recently taken into the Melbourne Hospital, and in order to revive him an electric shock was administered. The results were startling and unexpected. A demonic energy was instantaneously infused. He sent the doctor sprawling on the floor and flung a couple of assistants out of the window. Then he proceeded to wreck the ward, while nurses ran away shrieking and barricaded themselves. He had done a hundred pounds' worth of damage before the police, who were telephoned for, arrived. Electricity as a medical agent seems to be as yet imperfectly understood.—London Chronicle.

THE MOTHER.

I wander to the churchyard where
A little grave has all my care,
For I have left my baby there.

No stone or cross my love attest,
The mound with simple flowers is dressed,
It looks so small among the rest.

The robins round it hop and sing,
And there the rain and sunshine bring
The earliest blossoms of the spring.

The little heart that sleeps below—
There was so much it could not know,
One hoped the coming years would show.

There was so much left all unsaid,
The dreams on which my spirit fed,
When I would clasp his golden head.

The little tongue that scarce could say,
The simplest words of love and play,
How much with it has passed away.

And though no eye my weep can trace,
I carry round from place to place
The longing for a baby face.

And ever at the close of day,
When work is done, I steal away,
And by his grave I kneel and pray.

Sweet baby soul, now passed from sight,
God fold us 'neath His wings to-night,
And some day bring us forth to light.
—Frederick George Scott.
